Hydro for Markdale.

Hydro for Markdale. Article No. 3.—Costs and Rates. To the consumer of electric power, there is one consideration, which outweighs all others, and that is the question of cost. If Hydro Power should cost more than the power which it has superseded, it is superseding it, it would be counted but as loss to a great many people in the numerous municipalities which have adopted it. They would be prone to forget such benefits as efficient and consistent service if they should be asked to pay an increase of ten cents per month in their power bills. Fortunately, for the success of the project, however, the increase of efficiency of service has been accompanied by a reduction of cost. This decrease in cost is not the experience of one town here and there, but is reported from every individual community, which has hooked up to the Hydro Power Commission.

The daily papers are continually publishing, as news items, reports from municipalities that power costs are being lowered from time to time, since the total consumption of the Hydro Commission at the end of each succeeding year, gives sure evidence, not only of increasing operations, but of decreasing costs to municipalities and to individual consumers. As has been stated in an earlier article, the idea has been to produce, transmit and distribute power at cost. The Commission proposes to deliver power to Markdale at approximately $23.00 per horsepower per year. It is calculated that the amount of power taken by the municipality and paid for at the rate quoted will pay in thirty years for Markdale's share in the Eugenia plant and in the transmission lines; will provide for interest and depreciation and will take care of operating charges. The Commission, through its expert engineers, also figures that certain rates charged by Markdale to the consumers of power will provide sufficient revenue to meet these liabilities and to pay for the installation and maintenance of the local distribution system without the aid of the Hydro Commission. It is of course to be understood that all rural districts served directly from Markdale transmission lines would become a part of the Markdale system. The question of financing will be dealt with in a later article. For the present, it is only desired to emphasize the fact that the consumers pay the municipality, that the municipality pays the Commission, that the Commission returns the amount advanced by the Ontario Government and most particularly that the rates paid by the consumers in the several municipalities pay by means of the rates charged their proper and proportionate liability on the whole outlay.

We have tried to make as clear as possible the way in which the cost of the system is provided for, because that is one of the features of Hydro Management that should be thoroughly understood. We also wish to refute the common allegation, usually made by unthinking people, in municipalities about to vote on the Hydro proposition, and to nip in the bud what the newspapers would designate "another German lie," that Hydro power will raise the taxes. If you hear such a story circulated, you can rest assured that the person responsible for it knows nothing of what he is talking, or else that he is an interested party attempting a very underhand piece of deception. There could only be two possible circumstances in any municipality, which would be instrumental in raising the general tax rate to the extent of a single mill on the dollar. Both of these have to do with street lighting or municipal water pumping. A municipality having no street lighting would certainly, on adopting Hydro power, install street lamps. Continued on page five.

Dominion Day.

The 1st July was observed generally as a holiday. The weather was pleasant with some showers. After the rustling of numerous autos on our streets in the morning gathering up their precious freight for various points of celebration and pleasure, and other groups, who later hied away to place and another, there was little left in town to greet the eye except the fluttering of various flags.
