of our old beliefs and bring us to a realization that the world is advancing, that many of the old theories are being thrown in discard and many more will have to be.

Thus it is that any new science, however sound its principles and however rational its theories, has to fight against great odds to firmly establish itself in the public mind. For instance, without which no science can live. To do this it must prove its superiority to the older sciences we have known so long. For instance, be it a science of efficiency, in a business sense, it must make for us remarkable financial gains, as compared to our old systems, before we would accept it. Be it an advancement in Medical Science it must get results, where old methods fail. It must cure a certain percentage of diseases considered incurable under the old established regime. It must do this to be able to slowly forge ahead and establish itself on a firm footing with the other sciences, it must show greater efficiency in the handling of all conditions that come under the dispensation of the physician. Such has been the history of Osteopathy. A science scarcely fifty years old, yet one which has made a more rapid advancement and established itself more quickly and firmly than that of any in the history of science.

The founder of Osteopathy, Dr. A. T. Still, was a graduate of the so-called "regular" school of medicine and for many years practised medicine and surgery, being at the time of the civil war in the States a surgeon with the rank of Major.

After years of experiment and investigation, Dr. Still thoroughly believed he had evolved a system of treatment in advance of the old methods of drug medicine and one that would in time revolutionize the whole medical world. Realizing the violent opposition, ridicule and resentment the launching of his new theories would arouse, and knowing that only by actual PRACTICAL RESULTS in the treatment of disease, by CURING CURABLE by other schools of practice and after all other Methods had failed would be able to prove the logic of his reasoning to the world, he went bravely ahead. In the year 1874 he announced the discovery of his new science, one which he considered more logical and which he believed superior to the time dominated life in every respect to the older and better known methods of treatment.

another municipality already having street lights might, after passing the Hydro By-laws, install many additional lamps, thereby increasing the cost. Street lighting has been, and probably always will be paid out of the general tax receipts. And just while we are discussing this phase of the question, it might not be out of place to state that Markdale, under Hydro, could burn the same number of street lights and for the same number of hours as at present, at a less cost, or a number of extra lamps could be added to the present number, without increasing the cost. Another thing to remember is that the cost of street lighting will not be shouldered on the private consumers of power, but the municipality, through the local commission, has to look after the assessing and collecting of lighting rates, the private consumer might be called upon to pay enough in his monthly bills to provide the cost of current for the street lights. The municipality has to pay its bill for street lighting in just the same way that the private consumer pays for the light for his house or store or power motor. In this way the household, who is satisfied to keep on using coal oil lamps or kerosene candles, may do so, but he does not evade a share of the cost of street lighting, a benefit that he shares more than equally with the man, who burns electric light in his house, and who by doing so, helps to keep the cost down.

In a private enterprise, the rates charged, whether they be for electricity or for general merchandise, must meet all costs, including that of production, selling, profits and dividends, with the rates turned over to shareholders as a return on investment. As the Hydro Electric is a co-operative movement, the consumers are entitled to the profits and these are returned to them in the form of a reduction of rates. Whereas the business of the Hydro Electric utility in the town must be carried on under a cost basis, it is necessary, however, to provide sufficient revenue to keep slightly ahead of the expenses and to provide for future expenditures. To accomplish this, the rate is fixed slightly in excess of actual cost. In many municipalities using Hydro power, it is a difficult matter to avoid accumulating surpluses. In some instances, where rates have been reduced to avoid a surplus, the increase of business has continually brought in more surpluses and these surpluses have been used to finance substantial extensions to the distribution system, to the necessity of issuing debentures, and so on.

We have tried to give an expression of the general idea of costs and how they are met and we will now turn to a consideration of how the rates are figured out for all classes of consumers. To the private consumer the rates are as follows:

1. Domestic lighting.
2. Commercial lighting.
3. Power.

The rates, which will be quoted under each class are the very latest figures available from the estimates of the Hydro engineers. As most every consumer will pay rates under the class of domestic lighting, it is surely quite in order to deal with that class first of all, and at some length.

Perhaps the best method to adopt would be to enunciate the basis of rate figuring as per Hydro Regulations, and afterwards to interpret it into common everyday English, so that an ordinary white man may be able to do some figuring on his own account.

The Domestic rate, that is to say, the rate on house lighting is composed of two items.

- 1st. A service charge of three cents per hundred square feet, based on the inside area of the house, or rather of the main body of the house, with a minimum charge of 25c. per house.
- 2nd (a.) A consumption charge of 3 cents per Kilowatt hour up to 40 K. W. hours for the first 1000 ft. of floor space.
- (b.) The same rate of 3 cts. per K. W. hour up to an amount equal to 3 K. W. hours for every 100 sq. ft. of floor space over 1000 sq. ft.
- (c.) All additional consumption at 1 1/2 cts. per K. W. hour. The total bill subject to a prompt payment discount of 10 per cent.

This should be quite as clear as mud. In the first place what is meant by this service charge? People, who are unfriendly to the Hydro proposition, will tell you that this service charge is a kind of hold up, whereby the poor consumer has to pay for power whether he uses it or not. Let us analyse it. Power rates must include cost of developed current, plus cost of distribution. The consumption charge pays for the current used, while the service charge pays for the wires, poles, transformers, meters and other equipment necessary at all times, whether much or little current is used. Under private corporation management, these charges are lumped together, and the rate charged is higher than the service and consumption charges of Hydro combined. To put it in concisely, the distribution system has to be installed for you whether you use much light or little. The cost of that part of the plant is met by a fixed charge based, not on the amount of the light you burn, but on the size of the house that is served.

In order to figure out what this service charge amounts to on any house, take the outside measurement of the length of the building in feet, and multiply it by the width. If you have a house of five or more flats, multiply the area by the number of flats. From this total area, deduct 10 per cent, which is an allowance for walls and closets. The result of this calculation will give the number of square feet, on which to figure the service charge of 3c. cents per hundred feet. There is one important thing to remember in this connection. In figuring out the floor space do not include attics which are not used as bedrooms, or cellars or woodsheds or stables, or other outbuildings; just the main part of the house. You may have lights on your verandah or lawn or cellar, but the consumption charge is the only one which will figure in the cost of such lights. Unfortunately, we find that we have used up the space allotted in this paper. It means a break about the middle of a subject, but can not very well be helped. Next article will come where we leave off this week, viz: rates on house lighting.

Save the Children.

The following paragraph from the twentieth annual report of the Children's Aid Society of Owen Sound, and Grey County, recently published, is well worth reading:

Frequently it has been stated, but will bear repetition, that one of the greatest hindrances to our work is the failure of parents to realize their parental obligation. Many of them seem totally indifferent to the moral welfare of their children. What matters though the child does run the streets until late hours? If you ask where the boy or girl is, often the answer comes, "I don't know; down street somewhere." They do not know where or with whom, neither do they worry so long as they are "out of the way." The inevitable "out-of-the-way" become criminals, girls get into "trouble and disgrace." Over and over again we have spoken to parents and pointed out to them the danger of their child being exposed to the temptations of the street, only to be told that "they can take care of themselves." Sometimes we are led to ask; how long must we wait for parents to place true value upon the moral character of their children?
