MAKES EQUAL UNITS

The proposal of the Hames Calendar is, that the year consist of a death which was a shock to hereto of thirteen months, and Mount Zion neighborhood was that each month shall have in it twenty-eight days, no more and no less. Every week and month starts with a Sunday, and every holiday comes either on a Monday or Tuesday, so everybody may have Saturday half-holiday, Sunday and Friday would always come on Friday. Decoration Day, May 20th, would be lost altogether and a new day would have to be observed upon, probably June 2, which would always be a Monday, the fourth of July would fall on Wednesday, and so on.

Thirteen months of twenty-eight days each leaves one day a year out of the calculation, and on every fourth year there are two days to be disposed of.

The Hames' proposal is, that every year there shall be one day, falling between the last day of December and the first day of January. It shall not be counted at all, and it is to be a holiday. Then every fourth year it is proposed to have one extra day, a holiday and not counted, falling either in the very middle, or the odd or half-year month. The location of this leap-year day is not fully determined.

But it is determined in the Hames' plan that the new month shall fall between June and July. No name is suggested for it by Mr. Hames.

Some others have had names for it. The United States Government through its Bureau of Commerce has officially recognized the need for a change in the calendar, and has recommended in many points the Hames' proposals. The Bureau likes the position for the new month, but has not committed itself on the position of the leap-year date.

The foregoing considerations cover the political and the astronomical requirements, some of them taking into account political and astronomical requirements, but none until this year taking also into account ecclesiastical affairs. So all have failed, but one that is now proposed, meets with marked favor because it conforms to the needs of all three of these requirements.

The man to bring forward the Christain plan, when Easter falls very early in March, or very late in April. This coming Easter will be very late indeed. This late date is less to be regretted than a very early one, and yet the shifting of the date, based as now, upon cycles of the moon, occasions no end of trouble and often of loss.

In states that keep New Year's as a holiday, the laws would probably be changed, because if the new calendar be adopted, there will be a day less in the year.
