THE CABLEMAN

AN EXCITING PRESENT-DAY ROMANCE

BY WEATHERBY CHESNEY

CHAPTER VIII.—(Cont'd.)

After about fifty yards this gully ended in the shallow pool of the crater. A ring of jagged teeth of basalt made a complete circle, a quarter of a mile in diameter, broken only at the place where the two young men had entered. Below this black rampart the slopes were clothed with a green mantle of health and whorlberries; lower down there was a thick carpet of star-brown moss and lower still, barrenness, bare earth and tones, with a scanty growth of white upon them. The Caldeira itself was hardly more than ten yards across it now, but the white desolation round it marked the limits to which its waters sometimes rose. The waters themselves were white, like milk, and they were in constant curling, bubbling movement, like milk being boiled. A flood of steam rose from the center of the crater, expanding into a canopy, and twisted in overhanging, twisted in over the toothed edge of the crater.

"It reminds me of the picture of the genie in the Arabian Nights, rising in a cloud from the bracken jar," said Varney. "What's the small?"

"Sulphuretted hydrogen," said Scarborough. "There generally is a little of that about the amount varies. The vapors are mostly carbon dioxide. I believe, but after an earthquake any where in the island, the sulphur fumes are in sufficient quantity to be dangerous."

"Does this often happen?"

"Yes, pretty often; but I haven't heard of any earthquake lately. They were not the only visitors to the crater. A man was standing by the edge of the water, a little bit of an Azorean peasant, with a wide hat of his head and a cigarette of maize-flush between his lips. A donkey quietly browsing on the herbage at the edge of the whitened circle was evidently his property. Presently the man bent down and lifted a dripping steaming sack from the water.

"What's he doing?" Varney asked.

"Cooking," said Scarborough. "That sack is full of red lamb beans. They are a popular food here, and the sacks of them in every provision shop in Ponta Delgada."

"And they cook them in the Caldeira?" said Varney. "Is it not enough for that?"

"A few degrees below boiling point. I don't want to say anything about it. What's the cheapest kind of whole hog cooking I ever heard of?"

"Food is expensive in a country like this," said Scarborough. "But it is cheap. The lamb beans, like a weed, spring in the sea-level, the beans and the Caldeira cooks them. Our friend there probably comes here every day. It's his trade."

"Then he may have seen something of what happened yesterday," suggested Varney. "Ask him. You speak Portuguese."

"The man had slung his sack across the donkey's back, and seated himself on the top of it. His seat was a hot and wet one but he seemed to find it comfortable. He re-lit his cigarette and urged his beast towards the narrow entrance between the walls of pumice.

Scarborough approached him and the man, with the real politeness of the islanders, jumped to the ground and took his hat off.

"Bonas dias, senhores," he said. Scarborough returned his greeting, and asked whether he had heard anything of a dead man having been found there this morning.

"Sim, senhores," was the answer. "It was I who found him."

Then he went on to describe the episode with voluble earnestness and a wealth of dramatic gesture. The finding of a dead man was an event in his life, and he had the histrionic ability to make the most of his share in the occurrence. He entered into the explanations not only of what he had done in this alarming crisis, but also, minutely and comprehensively, of what he had thought. He explained that his first impulse had been to carry the news to the Corregedor at Ribeira Grande; for few Portuguese will touch a dead man, or help a dying man, until officials have given the word for that. He had, however, been done, they might be summoned as accomplices. The gentlemanly has a firm belief that the last hand which touches a dying man, is by the law of the land presumed to be the hand which gave him death, and it is a belief which in one well authenticated instance left a man who had been injured on the railway, a few miles from Coimbra, the intellectual capital of Portugal, to lie unaided through the heat of a long summer's day. He was conscious, and able to beg for water, but nothing could be done till he came and nothing could be done till he came. And this is not an isolated case.

But this Azorean peasant explained, and took pride in explaining, that he had risen superior to this fear.

"I helped to carry him," he said proudly.

"You helped? Then you were not alone?"

"I was alone at first, but I went to the Casa Davis, which is near here, and summoned the Senhor Davis. We carried the dead man to Senhor Davis' cart, which waited at the end of the road, and Senhor Davis drove him to the house which is called as Chinelas. I did not go with him. I had done enough, for, Senhores, the Corregedor had not said that the body was to be moved."

"What is he saying?" asked Varney in English.

"He is claiming to be a hero because he dared to touch a corpse," said Scarborough; and to the man asked, "Was that all?"

"What does the Senhor mean?"

"Did you see anything which suggested how the dead man met his death?"

"I don't suspect you," said Scarborough, rather impatiently. "I only want to know what you saw. You say you saw nothing?"

"I don't suspect you," said Scarborough, rather impatiently. "I only want to know what you saw. You say you saw nothing?"

"I am a poor man, Senhor. A poor man cannot afford to keep his eyes so wide open as richer men may. I say that I saw nothing."

Scarborough put his hand in his pocket and pulled out a milreis note. "Thank again," he said, quietly. "Were your eyes quite shut?"

"No, Senhor, not quite," said the Azorean. "What did you see?"

"I saw that the fingers of the dead man's right hand were tightly closed. There was something in the hand. I opened the fingers gently. It was only a flat stone with some scratches on it."

"Have you got the stone?"

"Sim, Senhor. It is a thing of no value. I keep it to remind me of the tragic affair in which I assisted this morning. A poor bean-seller's life is unenviable, Senhor."

"I will buy it from you," said Scarborough. "Two milreis."

The man put his hand into his pocket. "Five," he said insinuatingly. "Very well, five."

The bean-seller produced the stone and gave it to Scarborough. It was as he said, a small flat stone, about three inches square. It was covered with the white incrustation caused by the Caldeira water, and there were marks on it which something had been rubbing in pencil. But half a day's blousing had obliterated most of them, and those that were still legible owed their preservation to the fact that they were in the hollows of the stone's surface.

"What is it?" said Varney.

"It was a message, but this fool has rubbed most of it out. Can you make sense of it?"

Varney examined the stone closely, and he was all blue. "No drip" was all that remained of the writing. "Is it much?" he said. "But it may be the cipher of a message."

"To the murderer?"

"No, to the diamonds," he looks uncommonly like the end of the word 'cache,' and the rest tells where the cache is."

"Or did tell, before this idiot's blousing rubbed it out."

tain on the other side, too!" he added chuckling.

"Have you any reason for thinking that there is a woman in this case?" said Scarborough. He knew the expediency of all discussion at the Casa Davis, and experience told him that, if he was to get any useful information, both father and daughter would have to be kept to the point.

"Yes," said Mr. Davis. "Father means that he has the same reason that he usually has," opined Muriel. "You know how prejudiced he is."

Scarborough made a slight movement of impatience, and Mr. Davis noted it. He became grave at once. "You are quite right," he said, answering Scarborough's glance. "Muriel, our levity is rebuked, and I think we deserve it. I say that there is a woman in this case, because I saw her."

He went on to explain that last night, when Muriel came in to say that she had seen Mr. Page, and that he seemed to have recovered from his cough, the news surprised him, for he had called at the Chinelas a few hours before, and had been told that the cough was very bad. He went out, therefore, to see the phenomenon for himself, and, if possible, to persuade Mr. Page to come back to supper. He did not succeed in giving this invitation, because, though he caught sight of Mr. Page in the distance, he could not get near to him. He shouted, and was heard, for he got a wave of the hand in reply; but that was all.

On the Farm

To Make First-Class Butter

Begin by having the milking done in a clean way and in a clean stable. Keep the separator in condition by washing and scalding thoroughly after each using. Cool the cream immediately to 50 degrees or lower, in a tub of ice and water and keep cool and sweet until the churning is thorough. Keep the cream covered securely, but not air-tight. Let the temperature rise to 60 degrees or therabouts, and add a good starter. There is nothing better for this purpose than well flavored butter milk. Stir frequently until the cream is thick, soured and has a glossy appearance, when it is ready for the churn. Scald the churn and rinse with cold water before putting in the cream. The temperature should not be above 58 degrees in summer and 62 in winter and the butter should "come" in from 20 minutes to half an hour. Stop churning when the butter is in granules about the size of small wheat, and keep churning until no trace of milk remains. Care in this matter has much to do with the keeping qualities of the butter.

Remove the butter, (which should still be in grains), to a vessel in which it can be weighed. Use a shallow candy pail, weigh, turn out on the butter worker, and apply salt from one pound to one and one-half ounces to a hundred pounds of butter. Much of this salt is sold unsalted. Work very gently, being careful not to spoil the texture of the butter by unnecessary pressure. Let stand half an hour, work again, and print or pack. In printing, make the prints full weight, perfectly sharp, and wrap neatly with a good quality of parchment, bearing your name and address, or farm name. Keep in a cool place until wanted for market, then place in a clean box or basket, having a clean white cloth around that and under the box lid. Never let cream or butter stand when there is an odor of any kind.

When you go to market be sure your butter is good and say so. Have it looking neat and clean, yourself (or salesman) ditto, and you'll have no trouble in making good sales.

No, I didn't forget the coloring. The above describes my way of making butter and I never use butter coloring—Mrs. Alex. Agiary in Farm and Dairy.

Cutting Potato Seed.

In a bulletin issued by the South Dakota Agricultural College, it was shown the yield of potatoes from pieces of large seed potatoes was 28 per cent higher than from pieces of small seed potatoes. A more recent bulletin is now to hand from South Dakota, giving a series of experiments designed to determine the relative influence of the mere size of tuber and the strain of tuber in the increased yield obtained by planting pieces of larger tubers. Five series were arranged as follows:

1. Seed pieces of a given size from selected tubers.
2. Seed pieces of this same size from small tubers or culls.
3. Small seed pieces from tubers of a given size.
4. Medium seed pieces from tubers of a given size.
5. Large seed pieces from tubers of a given size.

These series of plots were carried out with two varieties of potatoes—Early Ohio and Garman No. 3. With regard to the first two series, out of a total of nine pairs of rows, six gave differences in favor of the selected tubers, though in all cases the pieces were equal in size in all cases. This superiority for the two varieties averaged 5.53 bushels per acre.

In the series 3, 4 and 5 the size of the seed pieces was the only variable factor, each piece being reduced to one-quarter, only. In every instance there was a pronounced difference in favor of the large seed pieces and the increase in production varied with the increase in size of the seed pieces. The average results of the two varieties (8 plots) were:

Bushels per Acre	Per cent
Small seed pieces, 174.73	100
Medium seed pieces, 217.71	125.5
Large seed pieces, 208.50	119.9

In order to determine the effect of strain of tuber on quality of crop, the crops of potatoes obtained in series 1 and 2 were weighed individually and from small seed, 64.8 per cent weight (2 ounces or more), whilst the percentage from large seed was 67.5 thus showing a slight superiority in the quality of the crop from selected tubers.

Warm Water for Cows.

Care and attention to the little things pay. Often, little improvements in our system of methods accomplish surprising results.

Milk is nearly 90 per cent water. To make large quantities of milk, a cow requires a large amount of water. In summer she usually has access to water at all times and helps herself at will, but when winter comes she is in the barn most of the time and offered water only once, or possibly twice, a day. To make matters worse, the water is often at or near freezing temperature, the cold water chills the entire digestive system. The water must be warmed by some means and a considerable amount of heat energy is required to do it. This can be supplied either by feeding the cow plentifully and letting her warm the water, or by heating it with fire.

The question of warming water, then, resolves itself into which method is cheaper. Corn is a great heat-supplying food. It is not profitable, however, to burn it in a stove to heat a house, because coal accomplishes the same result at a small fraction of the cost. Then why use corn to warm water for the cow?

The amount of water that a cow drinks will be found to have a direct relation to the amount of milk she produces; in general, the more water, the more milk. It is essential, then, to provide all the water that will drink at any season of the year. In the winter, especially in the northern states, water must be warmed in order to produce the best results. Probably the easiest and cheapest way to accomplish this is by using a tank heater.—Circular No. 21, United States Department of Agriculture.

THE KAISER'S LOSS

Particulars of Captured Colonies.

Mr. Bonar Law has furnished a table giving the following particulars of the German colonies captured, and the value of their revenue:

S. W. Africa—Area, 322,457 square miles. In 1914 estimated revenue, £21,175,000, and expenditure, £7,000,000. In 1913 imports valued at £3,000,000 marks, and exports at £3,000,000 marks.

Cameroons—Area, 300,000 square miles. In 1914 estimated revenue, £256,000, and expenditure, £28,000. In 1913 imports valued at 38,000,000 marks, and exports at 28,000,000 marks.

Togoland—Area, 92,700 square miles. In 1914 estimated revenue, £175,000, and expenditure, £22,000. In 1913 imports were valued at £9,000,000 marks and exports at £9,000,000 marks.

In the Pacific—Samoa 260 square miles, and Upolu 340 square miles. In 1914 estimated revenue, £500,000, and expenditure £680,000. In 1913 imports valued at 5,700,000 marks, and exports at 5,800,000 marks.

Kaiser Wilhelmshafen and Pacific Islands—70,000 square miles. Bismarck Archipelago, 2,640 square miles. The chief towns are Rabaul and Herbertshohe, both in New Pommern.

Caroline Islands, 1,000 square miles. Mariana Islands, and Marshall Islands—Area, 1,000 square miles, estimated population, 70,400. Revenue estimated at £15,000, and expenditure at £21,500.

Imports of Kaiser Wilhelmshafen and Bismarck Archipelago, estimated at 5,872,000 marks, and exports of Caroline and Marshall Islands, 3,335,000 marks, a total of 9,207,000 marks. Exports for the former amounted at 5,041,000 marks, and the latter at 7,046,000 marks, a total of 12,087,000 marks.

Kiao-Chau—Area, 290 square miles. The principal town is Tientsin. Revenue for 1911, estimated at 8,000,000 marks, and expenditure, 18,410,000 marks. In 1912, imports valued at 121,254,000 marks, and exports at 79,640,000 marks.

Probably the best way to get quick is to go slow.

ARE SIGNS OF INDIGESTION

Indigestion—the complex of partial failure of the digestive processes—quickly throws out of gear the whole machinery of the body. You can't eat the vulgar, and vitality of food itself, unless your stomach, liver and bowels do their work regularly and efficiently.

MOTHER SEIGEL'S SYRUP

As a digestive tonic and general remedy, Mother Seigel's Syrup is esteemed in tens of thousands of homes wherever the English language is spoken. If you suffer much from disorders of the stomach, liver or bowels, try the effect of taking 30 drops of this famous remedy, after meals, for a few days and note its beneficial effect.

AN IRON RING GRIPS GERMANY

PRIVATION AND MOURNING IN THE EMPIRE.

Deep Anxiety Also Felt Regarding the Finances of the Kaiser's Land.

Some part of the territory of France is occupied, but it is in men's thoughts by a shadowy presence. Throughout the empire there is mourning; it is a hundred deep mourning for the unnumbered dead whom neither victory nor peace could restore to friends and families, and there is the horror and the dread, everywhere present, of new afflictions. There is deep anxiety, too, about the finances of the empire. Plausible talk and assurances optimistically given to the German people cannot conceal the disaster and the increasing strain.

Germany cannot afford to lose the first instalment of the loan that she shall not. The country grows that with her apparently certain defeat at Verdun she has exhausted her power of offensive. She is headed off in the east by Salomon by the disillusionment and despair of the Turks, by the Russian troops toward Bagdad, by the British already perhaps on the move from Egypt, where the removal of the canal has released them from what we may call guard duty. The German navy is sealed off, it can come forth only to its destruction. There remains the possibility of another drive in Russia. It would be terribly costly, for not only is the country to be traversed exceedingly difficult, but the Russians have now well equipped for resistance. But a successful drive in that quarter even for a few miles, would not free Germany from her harassments at home. The other she penetrated into Russia, the worse off she would be.

The Allies Can Wait. This is beyond all question, and the allies hold of the present position of Germany. Plainly it is not to be solved, that conditions in the east shall not change save by the gradual and enormous expenditure of money for made their formidable preparation that end. These are the terms of a believing that nothing is to be done any discussion of peace, and that terms as those said to have been suggested by the German Government allies have put the matter in a position where they can afford to wait. Germany can still hold out stoutly; there can be no doubt that that the allies can wait. The ring of iron upon which they stand that victory is not a must, as the only way of the unendurable submission of the government in a free peace, those based upon the status of an indemnity from Prussia.

MANY ANIMALS IN THE ARMY.

Horses, Mules, Goats, Elephants, Camels Share in Struggle.

It is doubtful if more than 100,000 camels are in the present army. The camel includes horses, mules, elephants, goats and camels. The never weary camel is being used for draft purposes, and carries messages and supplies. Goats are being used for the Indian troops, and camels have been given to the handling heavy transport animals, however, the camel is most honored.

An Eastern legend has it that the camel was fashioned by the Creator, and so it is held in esteem by the people. Although a somewhat slow perhaps a bit temperamental camel is an untiring worker. He will travel on for hour without appearing to be in any way, and on this made a good name for him, it is not the least doubt that will come up to justify even if it is employed in the field.
