

RAIDS ON BRITISH TRENCHES TO THE NORTHEAST OF CARNEY

Three Times the Germans Attacked, but Were on Each Occasion Repulsed.

A despatch from London says: many German dead being left in the trenches. While the infantry fighting around St. Eloi has ceased for the time being the artillery of both sides is busy in that sector and there has been considerable trench mortar activity. The enemy raided the British trenches near La Boisselle after a heavy bombardment, in which he used lacrymatory shells. He was driven out, although the British lost a few prisoners. The capture of a few men working on the British front wire was the net result gained by the Germans in three attacks Wednesday night north-east of Carney. The attackers reached the British trenches, but were driven back great battle may be expected."

GERMANS ARE PREPARING FOR ANOTHER ATTACK

Paris Paper Says Enemy is Weakening Other Fronts To Strengthen Army at Verdun.

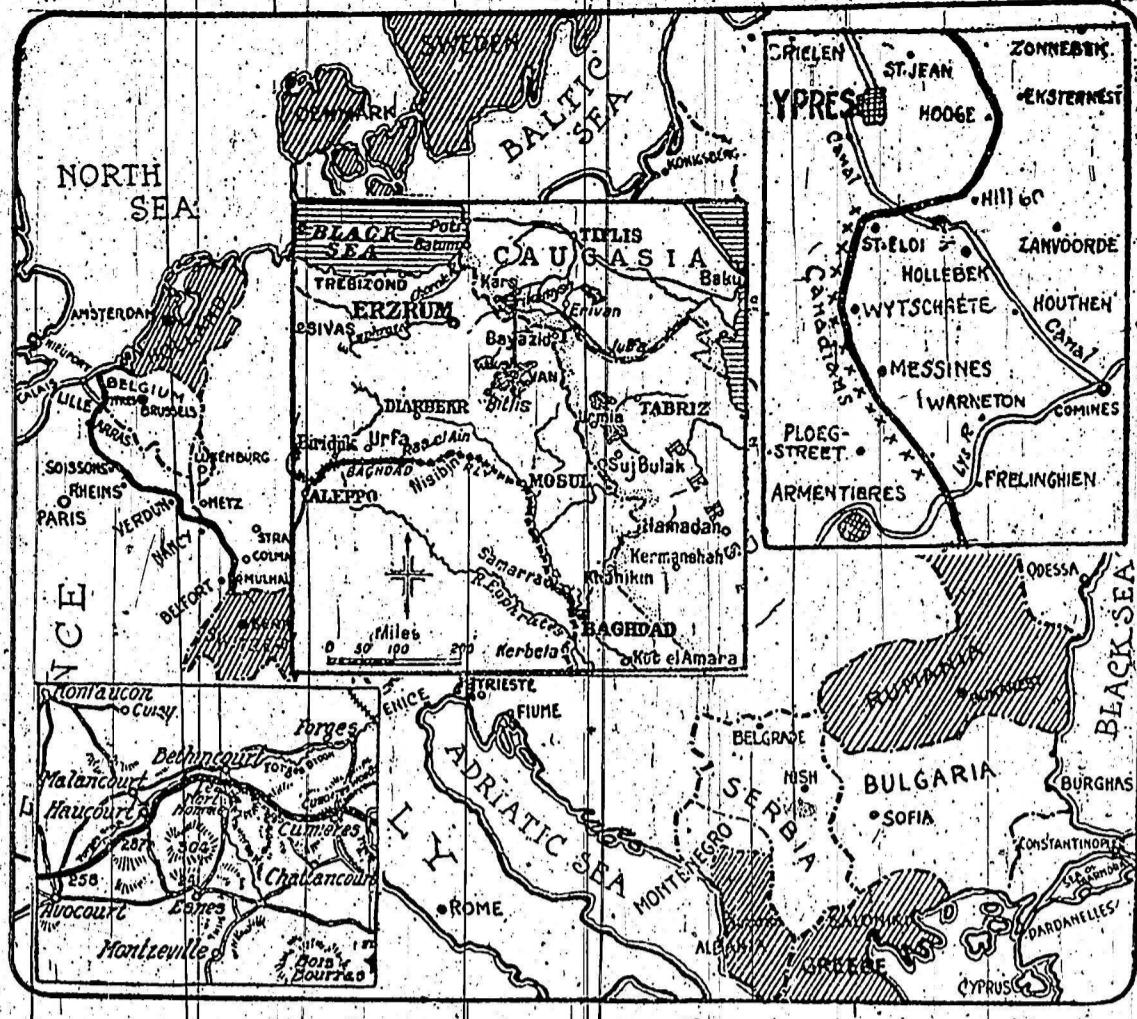

A despatch from Paris says: After an unprecedented struggle of 52 days the first battle of Verdun may be considered ended in the opinion of French military critics. These critics also agree that the next phase of the German assault is being prepared with the utmost deliberation.

The continued bombardment of the French lines to the west of Hill 204, a small attack on Thursday night south of Douaumont, on the east side of the Meuse, and two artillery engagements in the region of Mort Homme on Friday are looked upon as only an interlude.

As showing the extent of the German preparations for the next attack

The Petit Parisien is authority for the statement that seven new German divisions arrived at the Verdun front last Sunday. Five of these divisions (100,000 men) were immediately thrown into battle, while the other two were used later. The net result of all these efforts was the capture of 300 yards of trenches on the north slope of Dead Man's Hill (Mort Homme) at the cost of 30,000 men.

The Echo de Paris says that troops which were formerly facing the British have been sent to Verdun. "It is certain," says this paper, that the Germans are now weakening other parts of their line to strengthen their front at Verdun.

THE WEEK'S DEVELOPMENTS IN THE WAR.

In the early part of the week the Germans made great efforts to break down the defences of Verdun both to the east and the west of the Meuse. Almost daily simultaneous attacks were made in the region of Douaumont and Vaux on the east and along the Avocourt-Cumières front on the west. Dead Man's Hill, held mid-way between these two places, was the scene of the heaviest fighting, the ravines leading up to the hill enticing the Germans to try an enveloping movement on both sides. They did manage to get a footing on the western side of the foot of the hill, but there was great loss of men from the well-directed French fire.

At the middle of the week the French straightened out their line, and the enemy contented himself with frontal attacks which brought no benefit to him. The end of the week sees the operations on both sides hindered by wet and foggy weather, though at places artillery duels are taking place.

The British forces have been engaged further west to re-capture the crater positions at St. Eloi taken from them on March 27. These were given over to Carranza soldiers forming the 12th Battalion. The Germans did not participate, but used their best efforts to regain possession of them, but they have suffered heavy losses in all the attacks they have made.

They reported some days ago that they had re-captured the positions, but if they did they did not hold them into the enemy's territory, capturing some prisoners. On other parts of the British front the fighting has been mostly made up of artillery duels.

Fears have been frequently expressed in London as to the condition of the force of General Townshend which has been shut up in Kut-el-Amara for 129 days. The relieving force under Sir Percy Lake has been held up by the flooding of the Tigris, but Sir Percy Lake was able to report on Friday that he had caused severe damage to the enemy when waters from the flood entered the Turkish trenches and caused them to leave.

The Russians are preparing for an advance on Trebizond, the Turkish port on the Black Sea. The Turks are making every effort to protect the city of Balaklava, which is at the junction of the chief roads between Erzerum and Trebizond. The capture of Balaklava would facilitate the movement of the Czar's armies toward Trebizond.

The Portuguese have entered into the fight to take one of Germany's colonial possessions from her, and some degree.

It would appear that the denials of the Germans that a German submarine sank the Sussex, are proved to be false. Both the French and United States governments claim to have the name of the enemy craft which fired the torpedo, as well as the name of the commander.

TROOPS OF CANADA SUFFERED SEVERELY

STORIES OF SUPER U-BOATS AND UNDERWATER BOATS WITHOUT PERISCOPES PURELY IMAGINARY.

A despatch from London says: Details received here of fighting for verasters, in which the Canadians suffered severely, show that at one spot five mines in direct line and close together were sprung against the Germans, whose defence consequently was momentarily completely shattered. The Canadians then rushed forward to occupy the ground thus rendered untenable. The advance was supported by artillery. The observer declared that the fire from the guns so closely together and working incessantly was like a terrace of houses on fire. The Canadians secured ground for the time being, after which the struggle continued, with varying success on each side, as is the case in such operations. If the Canadian losses were severe there is no doubt the enemy lost many more.

Details of Clash Between Germans and Americans.

A despatch from El Paso, Texas, says: First actual entrance of United States troops in force into Mexican town resulted in an open fire and bombardment on both sides on Friday.

The trouble occurred at Carrizal, south-east of Ciudad Juarez, and one United States soldier was killed and several wounded. Mexicans precipitated the trouble by opening fire on the Americans as they were withdrawing from the town.

The Americans returned the fire, and Carrizal Garrison, their people to reinforce, according to reports from Carrizal sources.

BRITAIN PROHIBITS THE EXPORT OF IRON.

A despatch from London says: The British Government on Friday evening proclaimed an absolute prohibition of the export to any destination of all kinds of pig iron and nearly all steel supplies especially to the industry used by railroads and ship-builders, including rails, sleepers, beams, wheels, axles, tubes, grinders, ingots, bars, angles and rods and plates not more than an eighth of an inch in thickness.

The exportation of soap containing more than one per cent of glycerine is prohibited.
