The ceremony took place under an arch of evergreens decorated with white flowers and a large white bell. Rev. Thos. Laidlaw Methodist Minister, Heathcote, officiated.

The Right Spirit

We cannot all be patriots in the sense of appearing as such in public; but those of us to whom the privilege of platform speaking, or even of persuasion, is denied can, by force of example declare ourselves. This form of patriotism is denied to no man. In exercising it we are serving God and performing his duty, owing both to ourselves and to the country. We are also encouraging emulation, flow far, or even in what direction, that may reach none of us can forestall. To the right-thinking man, to the true patriot, it will be enough to know that within his power he is doing all that may be done. The extent of his personal influence will not trouble him, so much as the knowledge that he is bending all his best efforts to accomplish something useful in life will inspire him.

It is this spirit that paramount to all else without exception, we are specially called upon at this juncture to exercise. The man who fails in a minor sense almost as much a traitor to his country as the man who fails to his place of birth or to the land of his adoption. It is in this spirit—the right spirit—that we are summoned to the fight that the Empire is waging for the liberty of all people, the freedom of every nation, and the rigid observance of treaties and international engagements. By being actuated by it, no man will fall short in the responsibilities entailed by citizenship. It is this spirit that the campaign for production and thrift has been launched to develop and encourage.

No man or woman is justified in ignoring the call. He or she who recognizes it to the full, of such useful production as lies within his power is fulfilling a God-given duty. He who is guilty of waste, of wild extravagance, of woeful selfishness, places himself beyond the pale of patriot duty beyond the pale of Christian duty. This is a truth that one and all need to recognize and that in recognizing will bring into activity The Spirit. This is possible to every man, be he a lawyer, doctor, merchant, farmer or common labourer.
