GREAT PROGRESS MADE IN GERMAN EAST AFRICA

British Columns Pursued the Enemy As Far As the Vicinity of Neu-Etengule.

A despatch from London says: The following official statement was issued on Wednesday: "General North reports that the British columns which crossed Nyassaland into the German East Africa frontier on May 25 pursued the enemy in the direction of Iringa as far as the vicinity of Neu-Etengule. A number of prisoners, some ammunition and a quantity of stores and supplies were captured.

WILL GERMANY SELL HER FLEET?

RATHER THAN RISK A CRUSHING NAVAL DEFEAT.

German Ships Will Have to go Before the Allies Will Make Peace.

The value of Germany's Fleet may be roughly estimated at $1,000,000,000. At least, it costs Germany this amount to build it. For all the use it is at the present moment that fleet, with the exception of the submarines and the torpedo-boat destroyers, might just as well never have been built at all.

Customers in Plenty. There is a good market then, for any nation with battleships for sale any units. If she wants to sell warships to America, Chile, Brazil, or Denmark she must get them to the countries.

It is easy, of course, in the case of the countries with a Baltic sea-board, to pass over a few Dreadnoughts, for there Germany has only to fear her submarines; but it is not easy in the case of America, South America, or China. The last-named Power may be left out of the reckoning; it is impossible to conceive of any circumstances in which Germany could pass one of her ships through our cordons in the North Sea and the Mediterranean.

But the possibilities as regards America and South America are not conditions; by the same handicap, the German Fleet need only thread its way through our cordons and make a fight for it; but there is not the slightest reason for believing that such a tragic course will be adopted. Far more likely is it that bankrupt Germany will look about her to see whether her doomed Dreadnoughts cannot be turned to commercial value.

When the Goeben and the Breslau stood in danger of being cornered in the Mediterranean, they did not stand and fight, but ran into the Dardanelles, where they were safe, and at once passed into the possession of Turkey, thereby removing the last scruples of that Power to joining the cause of the Central Empires.

But if the German Fleet neither comes out to fight nor chooses to remain in harbor, what alternative is there left to it? Germany, if the worst comes to the worst, can sell her fleet!

The idea is not so laughable as it may sound, and the sapient folk who may ask with denision "To whom can Germany sell her fleet?" may be promptly and effectively answered, Germany can sell her fleet to the nations not at war.

What are these nations? They are American, the various republics of South America, Norway, Sweden, Italy, and the United States.

How could it do this without running the risk of a great naval battle? The answer is, it could not hope to escape meeting our fleet, but it would be in that meeting that Germany could rely on some of her warships getting through our cordon.

Assume the German Fleet, escorted by torpedo-destroyer flotillas, and accompanied by submarine flotillas, sailed out of the Kiel Canal into the North Sea and divided into two portions. One one to give our fleet battle, the other to make good its escape. Would anybody dare prophesy that

GERMANY MAY BE THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

WILL BRITAIN'S NAVY DEFEAT THE TEUTONIC POWERS?

A Gentleman Just From Holland Says the German Population is Underfed.

There is a possibility, which we ought not to calculate upon in a military sense, that the German armies will be defeated by starvation. It is an end to the war that British subjects would rejoice to see, for it would mean that it was the British navy that finally brought the Teutonic powers to their knees.

Stories From Germany. Today every story that comes from Germany is a story of food shortage. A year ago there were similar stories. It was said that Germany was starving, that the women and little children were without food. The prayers of the congregation were asked, the sympathy of the neutral world was required.

It is all very well to say that Germany would not be allowed to save any part of her fleet by selling it, but you know the old story of the man sentenced to be hanged. When his friends said to him, "Don't worry, he can't hang you!" he replied, "Quite so, but they are going to!"

Supposing Germany got two Dreadnoughts intended in Holland, two in Denmark, two in Sweden, four in America and five in South America, the Allies to overcome all the scruples of those nations to parting with them? We could, if we liked, compel Germany to give them to us, but the question is, would we?

At any rate, there is reason to believe that the idea of selling her fleet in such parts of it as she could save from a battle in the North Sea is one of the contingencies which is now being seriously debated by the German authorities.

The value of a Dreadnought is, roughly, $15,000,000. The sale of thirteen Dreadnoughts, which is all that Germany could hope to save from a battle with us, would bring her in, in round figures, about $200,000,000.

There will be a lot of bargaining done at the Peace Conference, and if objection were taken to the sale by Germany, of her escaped Dreadnoughts, the amount, thus secured might be included as one of the items in the peace balance sheet.

From Our Point of View. We should, of course, prefer to fight the German Navy to a finish, but it would be absurd for us to expect that such a battle would not be attended by heavy losses on our side, which losses would be fewer in proportion to the number of combatships employed.

It is essential for the continuance of the war that a great victory be won by the Central Powers so that the people may again put out the flags and the bands may play in the streets.

A Dream Shattered. "Sue, sweet," said the swain, "do you think that if we got married secretly your father would ever forgive us?" "I am sure he would," replied the girl without hesitation. "And would he give us a house of our own?" "Yes, darling," he replied, "I am big enough for us to live on in comfort!"

Brain Takes Food Inventory. A despatch from London says: The Government is taking an inventory of all the foodstuffs in the United Kingdom. Farmers are receiving a request from the Department of Agriculture for figures showing their resources.

She—I suppose you would have been happier if you had not married me?" He—"Yes, darling, but I wouldn't have known it."

GERMAN DESTROYER SUNK BY MINE. A despatch from Amsterdam says: The Telegraph says that a German destroyer struck a mine and went down off Zebrugg on May 31.

BRITAIN NOW TAKES OVER THE WOOL TRADE OF 1916. A despatch from London says: An army order issued on Thursday prohibits the purchase or sale of British or Irish wool of the 1916 season.

How The War Started. A Novelist Hits Off a Cover Bit of Dialogue.

Mr. B. Turkington, the well-known novelist, summarizes the conditions and conversations that preceded the war in the following dialogue: "I think you are right," said the publicist, "there is a horrible kind of hypocrisy in using diplomats to do what is done anyway with us."

21. Romans—See the note quoted, in the skill of the Jewish customs, might lead to the formation of the peace and the formation of a legal association. Stephen, stoned on suspicion of wanting to change these Jewish customs.

22. Paul—The order would be to move them, then strip and scour them." It does not, of course, mean that the pretors tore their clothes by the hair as taken from a city before the magistrate they set out.

23. Paul—From what I have seen, the Jews are not so much against the light, while himself from the alliance appearing safely in verse 23.

24. Paul—The cramped posture made sleep impossible, so that he took its place. Listening with attention and amazement, as if he had seen the bleeding faces as they were buried in the ground.

25. Paul—The chairs were fixed in the wall, and the doors secured by bolts. The father might dislodge with his life. Compare Acts 12: 10. The father was, of course, the one whom he had handled so roughly.

26. Paul—In this case an exaggerated rendering is adopted above. The identity of the title given to Jesus. So also is "deliverance" used to recall verse 17, from which this rough, untended man doubtless got the hint.

27. Paul—Thou wouldst not have saved along by Father! From the very first Christianity is social. O and the aged, ill and weak are dying by thousands because they cannot obtain the necessary sustenance. Food does not intend to follow the order of time; verse 31 is the summary of an exposition without which the call to believe would have been unintelligible. We may be sure the father regarded the missionaries' wounds as a hindrance to their message of hope.

28. Paul—The whole family story was told to the whole family when they were up in the jailer's house, and the baptism was the climax of their conversion. The baptism was the outward and visible sign of a cleansing more vital than the washing of those sores that scorched their faces. The well in the prior yard may be assumed to be the scene of both.

29. Paul—Compare Luke 23: 34. Rejoiced greatly. A very strong word; a favorite with Luke. It indicates that the man, with his "sifted" Christian camp and see the frolic till Christ taught them how to all his house. How suggestive is the reputation, Luke's story is a very interesting one. I have believed God (margin)—Despite some belated commentators, there is all the difference between being and believing: the first, it is Greek as in English, being limited to accepting some one's word. To take God at his word of course logically involves the higher trust, so that there is less difference between the two phrases than is very different in the men who had only "believed" Jesus! In Acts 27: 25 and 2 John 5: 10 we get the commentary for this verse.
