The members of this certain house were partaking of a late evening meal, seated around the table in the dining room. They heard bombs exploding and the fire of anti-aircraft guns.

Suddenly there was a tremendous crash at the back of the house. Evidently something had dropped into the conservatory. It was assumed that it was a bomb.

For a few minutes the people remained where they were, fearing a further explosion. Then they investigated.

In the conservatory, most of the glass of which was broken, they found a dead German air-sailor.

He had evidently fallen from a Zeppelin or perhaps he was knocked out by a well-placed British shell.

He had fallen from a tremendous height, probably no less than 7,000 feet, and he was naturally badly mutilated.
