ALSATIANS LEARN FRENCH.

Children Acquire Language in Fifteen Months.

H. Warner Allen, the representative of the British Press with the French army, describes in the following dispatch the rapid progress the Alsatian children have made in the study of French since the welcome invasion of the French:

"After 15 years French is once more taught in the schools of Alsace. The French marched victoriously into Alsace; they marched from the Rhine beneath a shower of flowers which moved the General to send a message to the rebel Alsatians. 'You have received the French with roses, but we shall forget me nots!'—and nobody could be more surprising than the rapid progress made by children in learning French in the short time since then.

"It is delightful for them a fascination. I have heard children of another French in the streets and every child makes a point of 'French' to the French officers. One little girl was telling a relation, apparently in English, 'Auf wiedersehen!' 'No,' said the child in question, 'we are French now! Au revoir!' Sometimes have found the spelling is sufficient to puzzle a grown-up. A little girl a thorough knowledge of the language and literature was once forbidden, on account of one of the characters, to read a book which had been presented to a girl of 12. The book, of course, was 'Le Roi de France,' and the high personage in question, I knew, was Henri Quatre. I suggested that she would be interested to read it to the point, as she accepted the suggestion, as she did whether the child whether the book was 'Le Roi de France' or 'Le Roi de France.' To his horror, of course, he found 'Le Roi de France' was the more interesting of the two, and then, when I enjoyed, and then, when I was twinkle in her eye, she said, 'Monsieur l'Adore France,' I am happy to send you a message for the French soldiers.' 'Tell them,' she said, 'tell them we shall win.'"

EARL OF CRAWFORD IS A DEMOCRAT

NEW MEMBER OF THE COALITION CABINET IN BRITAIN.

In Army Medical Corps When War Broke Out, and Rose to Rank of Corporal.

The inclusion of the Earl of Crawford in the British Cabinet as successor to Lord Selborne, as President of the Board of Agriculture, is an appointment that is certain to be popular with members of all parties. It will be very popular with members of the House of Commons, in which chamber the earl sat for fifteen successive years as member for the Chorley division of Lancashire, prior to his accession to the peerage on his father's death three years ago. For Lord Balcarres (pronounced "Balcarrez" with the accent on the second syllable) as he was in his House of Commons days, was immensely popular personally with political friends and opponents alike. In fact, it used to be said of him that he was one of the four most popular men in the House, the other three being Sir George Younger, Unionist Member for Ayr; Mr. Ure, then Lord Advocate for Scotland in Mr. Asquith's Government; and Sir Edward Carson. Which goes to show that the House of Commons is pretty catholic in its tastes as regards its favorites.

Earl of Crawford.

For some years the then Lord Balcarres was a junior Lord of the Treasury and one of the Unionist whips. In fact, his tact and geniality had not a little to do with keeping Mr. Balfour's Government in the days when it was tottering to its fall, in office. When the war broke out the Earl, who is forty-five years old, went to the front as an ambulance bearer, enlisting as a private and subsequently attaining the rank of "Corporal Crawford."

The Tory Democrat.

David Alexander Edward Lindsay is his full name, but he is known to his friends (and their number is legion) as "Hal." Though a Tory in politics, he is extremely democratic in temperament. He is an athlete, a fine boxer, a teetotaller, and possessed of a fund of humor which never degenerates into bitterness. He owns about fifteen thousand acres, and a couple of fine country seats, Haigh Hall, Wigan, and Balcarres House in Fifeshire, for one division of which Scottish county Mr. Asquith is member.

The Lindsays, of which family he is the head, are known in Scotland as "the Light Lindsays" because of the sandy hair which usually prevails in their family, though, as it happens, the present Earl's hair is dark. In the same way, all over Scotland the Campbells are known as "the Red Campbells," and the Douglasses as "the Black Douglasses." The present Lord Crawford has six children—two boys, of whom the elder, the heir to the earldom, is sixteen years old, and four girls. His wife is the younger daughter of the late Sir Henry Pelly, Baronet. Her elder sister, as Miss Annie Pelly, was well known in Canada as lady-in-waiting to H.R.H. the Duchess of Connaught, and married Capt. Rivers-Bulkeley, A.D.C. to the Duke, who was killed in action the year before last.

Lord Crawford is an extremely good chess player. He is also an authority on Italian art, is a trustee of the National Portrait Gallery, and belongs to the Fine Arts Club. As a Parliamentary speaker he is bright and original, and, while he has no pretensions of eloquence, his speeches are full of sound common sense. Altogether, he is one of those aristocrats of whom it cannot be said, as it can of many, that they are like potatoes because the best part of them is under the ground.

His Famous Lineage.

The Lindsays are one of the greatest houses in Scotland. The Earl of Crawford is the twenty-seventh earl—the premier Earl of Scotland. The house has a very remote feudal, and even legendary, history, an early ancestor being reputed to be descended from "Thor," who was reputed to be the son of "Odin." The family is supposed to be related to William the Conqueror, and members of it frequently intermarried with the Royal Scottish houses of Bruce and Stuart. Walter de Lindsay, an ancestor of Lord Crawford's, sat in the Scottish Parliament as a lord, in virtue of his estates. The first earl, who was known as the ninth Lord of Crawford, obtained his earldom from King Richard II. in the year 1398 as a reward for his "prowess in a passage of arms with Lord Weyles upon London bridge before King Richard II. and his Queen." The sixth earl fell, with so many other Scottish nobles, in the battle of Flodden Field, and the sixteenth early fought on the Royalist side in the battle of Marston Moor.

Some idea of the high esteem in which the family held itself, and was held by others, may be gathered from the fact that when King James IV of Scotland, in 1488, created the Earl of Crawford of that day, who was Lord High Admiral and Lord Justiciary of Scotland, Duke of Montrose, the earl didn't assume the title. He thought his dignity of such a degree that it was not in the power of any monarch to enhance it. His successors in the earldom took the same view, and a couple of hundred years later, the dukedom of Montrose was conferred upon the house of Graham, another ancient Scottish house, who hold it to-day.

However, we live in other days. The Earl of Crawford in the fifteenth century would accept no title from his king. The Earl of Crawford of to-day has wooed the suffrages of the electors, and very successfully, too, for he came triumphantly through seven elections in his House of Commons days. And as member of the present Cabinet is more simple and unaffected, and less "stuck on himself" than he is.

ROLL OF HONOR.

Several thousand officers and employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company enlisted for active military duty with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, and the majority of them are now in Europe, bravely battling for Canada and the Empire.

As particulars of Army Reservists are not available, these lists of those who have given up their lives for their country or been wounded in action are necessarily incomplete, and do not therefore indicate fully the extent to which the Company's officers and employees have participated in the great struggle.

Addison, Herbert, carpenter, Winnipeg, wounded; Anderson, John M., clerk, Calgary, wounded; Arlke, Harry, tariff compiler, Winnipeg, wounded; Atkinson, Arthur, cook, Montreal, wounded; Boushear, Henry, engineer, Fort William, wounded; Burritt, Edgar M., clerk, North Bay, killed in action; Chapman, Edward, machinist, Angus, killed in action; Diver, John W. car repairer, Toronto, killed in action; Ellis, Thomas G. G., record clerk, Montreal, died of wounds; Foster, James B., car repairer, Fort William, wounded; Gilchrist, Thomas R., draftsman, Ogden shops, suffering from shock; Hamilton, Edward, deliveryman, Winnipeg, wounded; Haswell, John, boilermaker's helper, Moose Jaw, wounded; Hilliard, Samuel J., porter, Edmonton, wounded; Hogg, James, clerk, Montreal, killed in action; Hunt, Thomas, fitter's helper, West Toronto, suffering from shock; Kinahan, Ernest, switchman, Brit. Colum. OUTNUMBERED BY WOMEN.

German Men in Government Service Now in Minority.

As a result of the men having been called to the colors, the number of women employed in Government bureaus and offices in Germany has gradually increased until now the female employes are in a decided majority, says the North German Gazette. The rate of increase in the employment of women in office work during 1915 is shown by the figures during each three-month period. Of these new employes the women formed 40 per cent. in the first quarter of the year, 43 in the second, 48 in the third and 52 in the last.

Another feature brought out by the report of the State Insurance Fund is the rapid increase in the number of young persons taking office jobs. While in the first few months following the outbreak of the war the number of new employes under 18 years old was smaller than that of those over 18, a sharp change in the average age of the applicants was noted in December, 1914, and the data for 1915 shows that the number of employes under 18 hired during that year was 134,461, against 83,813 who had passed that age.

Elephants Not Cowards.

The fear an elephant has for a rat has often been spoken of as an example of colossal cowardice. But it is nothing of the kind. The elephant, when captive and in chains, has every reason to regard with terror the little rodent, which, in the still watches of the night, gnaws the toenails of the helpless pachyderm. Not much of this sort of thing is required to make the huge creature lame.

RATS IN TRENCHES.

Killed by Electricity—How French Clean Rodents Out.

Numerous have been the methods employed by the soldiers in the French trenches to kill the rats which constitute a veritable plague in the western war zone; but perhaps none has been so interesting—and so effective—as the electric method. A trough is excavated along a rat-run adjoining the trenches, and over this are placed three wires running parallel to each other. A constant supply of current is maintained in the wires, which are spaced only a few inches apart. The rats, in crossing the trough, come in contact with the wires, resulting in immediate death. It is reported that hundreds of rats are killed each week by this method.

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER.

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentery and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevents stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

He Also Ran.

A young man was stopped at the door of a fashionable church by the sexton with the inquiry:

"Are you related to the bride or bridegroom?"

"No," was the answer.

"Then," the sexton said, "you will pardon me for asking what interest you have in a ceremony that is to be of the quietest character?"

"I am," the young man announced, sadly, "I am the defeated candidate."

She Knew a Windfall.

"Why, these apples are dirty," complained the young housekeeper.

"Well, yes, they are," admitted the farmer. "You see they are windfalls, and that is why I can sell them so cheap."

"You mean they've fallen from the trees on to the ground, but they are otherwise all right?" the customer inquired; then, proud of her ready understanding, she bought them.

Several days later she called the farmer's wife on the telephone.

"I ordered the best cucumbers for pickling," she said sharply, "and you've sent me windfalls!"

"Sent what?" gasped the farmer's wife.

"Windfall cucumbers! I can tell you needn't think I can't. There's dirt on them!"

Measuring the Wind.

The speed of the wind is measured by means of an ingenious instrument called the anemometer. It is like a weather vane, with cups instead of letters at the ends of its arms. The cups, catching the wind, whiz round, and thus turn the central shaft. This passes down into a box in which are several dials. The indicators of those dials are connected with the shaft, and move according to its revolutions. Thus the number of revolutions of the cup in a certain time gives the exact speed in miles per hour.

The first successful Atlantic cable was laid in 1866.

WINDFALLS THAT WERE WONDERFUL

LEGACIES FROM PEOPLE THEY HAD NEVER SEEN.

Romances of Large and Unexpected Fortunes Suddenly Acquired.

There are few of the stories of suddenly-acquired riches more fascinating, and also more tantalising, than those which tell of men and women raised from poverty to affluence by unexpected legacies from testators whom, in many cases, they have never even set eyes on, says London Answers.

A month seldom passes in which the newspapers do not tell us of some such story as that of the San Francisco tram-conductor named Gopvic, who returned from his day's work to find a letter awaiting him with the news that a distant cousin, whom he had never seen, had left him $1,000,000; of Adelaide Wright, a telegraphist of St. Louis, who became a millionaire in a day through the death of a great-aunt; or of Mdlle. Burch, a poor Swiss girl, who was made rich by a legacy of $250,000 from a wealthy Englishman whom she had years, before, tended when he fell in a faint in a London street.

He Was Well Rewarded.

It is not long since the papers were full of the romantic story of Michael M'Donald, caretaker of a Lancashire club, who awoke one morning to learn that he and his brother were sole heirs to a millionaire uncle who had died in California; and of the good fortune of Miss Annie Scott, daughter of a weighman at Idle Station, near Bradford, who came into a fortune of $500,000, the gratifying fruits of her friendship with Miss Alice Page, a wealthy young lady of Manchester.

Still more remarkable was the story of Mr. J. R. Conway, a Sheffield man, who in his younger days in London had played the "Good Samaritan" to two ladies reduced almost to starvation. Years passed. Mr. Conway had long left London, and his good services to the distressed gentlewoman were but a faint memory, when one day he received a solicitor's letter informing him that the survivor of the two objects of his charity had died a rich woman, and had left him a legacy of $150,000 in recognition of his kindness.

Too Old to Enjoy it.

"It is a pity it did not come to me earlier in life," was the comment of Edward Corcoran, a Dublin saddler nearing seventy, when he learned that he was heir to $500,000, left him by a friend of his boyhood, John Sullivan, who had sought fortune across the Atlantic.

Fortune was in her most capricious mood when, a few years ago, she revealed Richard Roberts, a Durham sandwich-man, who was living in an old tenement at a rental of three shillings a week, as next-of-kin to a millionaire relative, of whose existence he scarcely was aware; and also when four brothers, Bristol artisans, found themselves heirs to the estate of a kinsman, a Brooklyn merchant, valued at a milion and a quarter dollars.

Among other favorites of Fortune in recent years were Miss Molly Delaine, a pretty and popular actress, who thought riches as remote as the stars, when one day the astounding news came to her that a relative, of whom she had seen very little, had left her the comfortable fortune of $200,000; and Miss Agnes Jennette Russell, of Dunfermline, who unexpectedly inherited $485,000 on the death of a brother, in whose sordid room in Brooklyn were found two trunks containing securities worth $400,000 and a bank-book showing deposits of $85,000.

Duty First.

But perhaps the most remarkable of all these stories of lucky windfalls is that told of young William Warren Morrison, who was employed in a Boston printing office.

"The boy, who is seventeen years old," says a Boston paper, "has received news that he is heir to $20,000,000 left him by his great-uncle, a Californian Croesus. He knew about it, but was at his work to-day, clothed and in his right mind. He trotted around with proofs, answered the telephone, ran errands, and performed the various duties of the 'printer's devil' as zealously as if his life depended on keeping his job at three dollars a week."

Doubtful Recovery.

The lusty-lunged itinerant auctioneer was holding forth in the market place.

Taking up a box of cigars he shouted at the top of his voice: "You can't get better, gentlemen! I don't care where you go, you can't get better!"

"No," came a cynical voice from the back of the crowd, "you can't. I smoked one last week, and I'm not better yet."

It takes twelve seconds for the projectile of a 12-in. naval gun to reach its point of impact when firing at a range of five miles. Shells for 12-in. guns cost $500 apiece.
