Punctuality.

The punctual person is simply one who deals honestly with time, and who wantonly wastes neither his own time nor that of others. To keep some one waiting is to rob him of time which may be valuable to him and to which he has as much right as the money he carries or the property he owns.

Furthermore, a person who is always behind time is robbing himself of some of the fiber and strength of his own nature. This habit also will rob him of some part of the regard in which he is held by others, and sooner or later it will cause some failure or loss which will bring him with a start to a sense of the value of punctuality.

The various parts of a fine machine all work in perfect time. If a cog or a piston were a single moment behind time, the result would be disaster and loss. When the various organs of a human body do not do their work promptly and regularly suffering and death result. Can social organization, a business concern or any organized forces escape the same result if any of its parts fail to work systematically?

A few minutes may seem a trifling loss but great destinies sometimes swing on a few minutes of time. One never knows how much is involved in his being on time. "A miss is as good as a mile." People who do things in a high value to a boy who is known always to keep his word if possible. And a boy who takes pride in keeping his promises will strain a point any time to keep an appointment promptly.

Have a program for the day, hour by hour, and follow it. It will pay you richly as the years go by.

Soldier's Letters.

The following two letters, presented with information direct from the front, will no doubt be of interest to many:

June 14th, 1916.
The Ypres salient is being restored. The working parties are repairing breaches, and the engineers are busy with their revetting. Were one to walk through Maple Copse to Sanctuary wood where the Princess Pals had to withstand a terrific thrust, it would be difficult to gather any definite impressions of what a certain day in early June brought forth. Evidence on every hand of the great struggle, one can write of these things, but who can understand? So much happens in a few short hours. Our trenches clean and in repair, the day sentry glancing now, and then through the periscope sees no movement, and wonders if the Huns are having a little sleep after a night of watching. The sky may be all blue and a wandering bird may dare to lift a song, and then a lone shell comes over (just to register up) and then—well, the hounds of hell are loosed. Such it was on a morning in the month of bridges, and when night came on Canada had lost a thousand heroes—they go on "de long voyage" but the people at home will not forget them.

There has been some discussion as to the advisability of retaining Ypres salient. The position is good in many respects. Our lines are on a dominating ridge, a good part of the way around, but our position is something like the half-circle of a race track, and we suffer from enfilading fire. It would be very regretful if the mothers and others who have lost loved ones should think the sacrifice was needless. The Canadians are in the same trenches still. We held them at Hooge—we stopped them at Sanctuary wood—who says lives were thrown away.

The boys are watching the great events now happening. We are reorganizing, getting reinforcements, making trench raids, and worrying Fritz as much as possible. What part Canada will play in the winding-up proceedings it is hard to say. We may be given an opportunity to advance here. What a great day it would be to push the Hun back from a posi-

THEY'RE FINE FOR KIDDIES.

You should always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets on hand. They are often needed, a mild and safe cathartic, and they do appreciate Chamberlain's tablets of stomach and liver mixtures. For stomach troubles and constipation, give the just before meals. cause, it is not safe to indulge in prophesies. Some regard H. G. Wells as the most prophetic writer in England, but he held that the war would finish only when exhaustion, physical, financial and moral had come to the powers engaged. We would not be able to break through and the Hun would be in the same predicament. But the events of the last two weeks have shown how lacking in prophetic vision is H. G. Wells. We are past their second line of defense at this writing. If we once get them going, isn't that phrase of Wolf's aide going to come in: "see, they run?" Affectionate son, STANLEY.

July 10th, 1916.

Dear Father and Mother: We came out of trench last night. Our tour was very satisfactory, and Wilf and I came out unscathed. To-day there is the usual washing up. We are billeted in what was once the country residence of a person of some distinction. The grounds are spacious, there are mammoth trees and well arranged driveways. The house is of white stone, partially demolished now and architectually well conceived. Of the chateau style it is surrounded by a moat. In the brave days of old, this has been the home of a wealthy citizen of Ypres. It is situated on one of the main roads leading to that dead city. Guern, my sniping mate, and I occupy a unique dugout. A large tree had fallen, and with this, as a protecting wall, typical shelter has been made. The tree is so large that it would tolerate quite a good sized shell and we are at rest as we work. Our last tour was for five days in a frontage originally known as the Rayne. We had not been in there previously. It is in a salient, but our line is on a ridge, and that allows support trenches to be constructed in dead ground as far as possible. The result being that on the railroads and, found that there had been a mistake in the circular sent out to their agents. From guns which discharge a shell going on a low trajectory we were also safe, but the howitzer could not. The trenches were the best I have yet seen; a perfect maze of them. The Germans had been in, and I imagine had done the most of the work, we retaining the old and building new. It was a strong position and would cost the Huns heavy casualties were they to presume to take it. I am enclosing a piece of Hun shelling. It would appear to be made cheaply as compared with ours, like a potato stick.

My partner and I had very good results last time in which sounds rather cold-blooded, doesn't it, but will not detail the happenings. Over here time is of the essence as regards the taking of human life. Of course if we get a man and see he is wounded, there is no further shot fired. Our work is to put a man out of action, not to kill him to the last. With our high powered telescopes and telescopic rifle sights, it is possible to see a fly on the enemy parapet. Suppose an incautious German puts his head up for a second, and we happen to be trained on that spot, it means the crack of a rifle, and the observer, accustomed to this work, can actually follow the course of the bullet and ascertain the hit. Of course, one may raise his head and take a quick glance, but it does not pay to look a second time in the same place. The German has patience and has probably seen you. The work of the sniper is invaluable. We protect our men, let the enemy know we are on the job, observe new work on his parapet, locate loopholes and machine gun emplacements, smash periscopes and generally annoy and keep him down. I think we have it on the German in this work. At least, my last two trips have shown that result. He hardly ever replies to our shots and his snipers appear to be inactive compared with our own. Our hours are long, the sniper being on the job in two shifts at daylight until the flares begin at dark, is a great game in this year of our Lord, 1916.

I should mention that I witnessed the last time in one of the fiercest artillery duels of the year. The German started it by sending over trench mortars and a lot of heavies on the frontage to our left. Our boys came back with everything they had. For three hours they kept it going and the crump and bark was incessant. The woods and fields were alive with guns. Then, when they landed some close ones, but we never let up. Our fellows got the tingle in their veins, and we felt them have it. I think we had Ole Fritz wishing we had never started. It is an indication of our ever-increasing superiority, certainly, our artillery was all to the good last night. We were relieved in the midst of the fuel and it was an inspiring scene to see our guns talking.

The news on all fronts seems to be good. We cannot afford to be hurriedly optimistic. The British and French have a stern resistance to overcome. I am certain that the German has made more defensive preparation in Belgium than on any other front. We no longer expect to breach a hole and rush through to Berlin. That may come in the last stages, but not yet. Keep him fretful, shell him every day, that is the first dose, and then come at him with everything we have. Our Russian friends are doing a great work, they "keep on," fine words those. The Berlin newspapers, extracts from which are published daily in the London papers, speak to day of a great trial, dark hours ahead, and the necessity for calmness. Yes, that is it, the Hun will need all his fortitude. But can a caged lion be calm? Let him once feel the gloom impending, let him once feel the awfulness of defeat, and his sophist calmness will soon leave him. And once we get him going, he will surely be one of the biggest wailers in history.
