AT THE MOVIES

Sixth Episode of
"The Master Key"

At the Princess Theatre, Markdale Friday and Saturday Oct. 13 and 14

Graham Bros., Proprietors

Universal Special Feature Serial completed despite interference of San Francisco Chinamen, who feared white slave investigation. Glimpses of the little known Chinese underworld.

In the filming of the latest installment of "The Master Key" John Fleming Wilson, the author of the series, and Robert Leonard, the producing director, encountered much opposition from the San Francisco Chinese, who feared that white slave investigators were about to take pictures of Chinatown resorts for use in a campaign to secure the expulsion of the colony.

When the Rex Company arrived in San Francisco from the Hollywood studios they made their way to Chinatown and started work. Almost immediately scores of Chinamen gathered about the camera operators and actors. None of them offered the slightest opposition to Director Leonard, but all steadily gathered closer and closer until it was impossible for the cameramen to film the scenes.

It was finally discovered through an interpreter, that the Chinese had organized to prevent any pictures of their colony being taken. It developed that a short time before a moving picture company had "shot" a number of scenes in Chinatown, which were afterwards used in films dealing with the white slave traffic. Following the exhibition of the film the police had become unusually and annoyingly active in Chinatown.

Leonard was advised to see the Chinese consul. Accompanied by Supervisor Charles Nelson, Leonard and Calder Jonstone called upon the consul, who sent his secretary with the Rex Company to explain matters to the inhabitants of Chinatown. The consul's secretary translated the script of the sixth episode of "The Master Key" to the menacing Chinese, who appeared in a measure to be mollified by his talk. At last they agreed to stand back to permit the pictures being taken. The following day the Rex company again appeared for work, and they were this time left to finish in peace, although the looks that greeted them were anything but friendly.

Mr. Wilson, the author of "The Master Key," is thoroughly familiar with San Francisco Chinatown, having been assigned to cover that district while a reporter on the San Francisco Call. M. G. Jones, secretary to T. W. Kellogg, of the Call, accompanied by Supervisor Charles Nelson, Leonard and Calder Jonstone called upon the consul, who sent his secretary with the Rex Company to explain matters to the inhabitants of Chinatown.
