Twelfth Episode of "The Master Key"

At the Princess Theatre, Markdale Friday and Saturday Nov. 24 and 25

Graham Bros., Proprietors

In which Dore and Ruth go to India and are flooded amid settings of dazzling Oriental beauty.

Extraordinary preparations were made and extensive plans executed for the filming of the twelfth episode of the Universal Special Feature Serial, "The Master Key." Each week this sensational serial increases in dramatic strength. Starting out with a thrilling first episode, the serial has now attained the momentum of an avalanche. Sensation follows sensation in stupendous crashes, which pile up one after another until the spectator becomes feverish trying to follow them. The serial has now attained a crescendo of nerve-racking excitement which, other so-called "serials" have tried to imitate with dire results.

In the production of the latest episode, number twelve, of this surprisingly wonderful feature the Universal has constructed a little Bombay on the Pacific Coast near Los Angeles. Samrans take the entire company, including Robert Leonard, Ella Hall, Harry Carter, Alan Forrest, Jean Hathaway, Alfred Lickman and the hundreds of supernumeraries to shore where they land at a reproduction of Bombay's "Jetties" or wharf.

On shore the Var Wijk Hotel in Bombay, India, has been reproduced and in the background are Chinese and Hindu theatres, a street in the native quarter of Bombay, monolithic pagodas, domed temples with their needle-like minarets, and the wonder creation of the whole city—a reproduction of the great Indian temple, the Taj Mahal with its marble fountains and dozens of domed spires. A section of this wonderful native temple is reproduced on this page. Hindu natives, brought down from the railroad camps in British Columbia, are costumed in native garb and take part in the play. Robert Leonard in white multi strolls through the arcades of the wonderful structure and enters the altar room of the temple where he attempts to steal the idol in which is hidden the secret of the Master Key mine.

Temple bells tinkle about him as he sweeps aside the rare tapestries and kneels, apparently in adoration, upon a prayer carpet. Through the doors of the temple, huge elephants with howdahs on their backs clump hump along. And then the fight occurs. Natives armed with jewelled scimitars attack the young American, who is finally rescued by British soldiers and hurries, badly wounded, from the scene. But here is the story of the latest episode of this most thrilling of all serials.

It will be remembered that in the eleventh episode of "The Master Key" that a Hindu pedlar, visiting a pawnshop to sell his wares, consisting of a few Oriental rugs, sees the idol, recognizes it as one which was stolen from him in India years before, and immediately purchases it. The idol has a long history, of which Dore and Ruth know nothing. Upon tracing it to the pawnshop, however, they learn that the Hindu has forestalled them, and that the idol is gone. Wilkerson, also searching for the valuable idol, which he has permitted to slip through his fingers, trails Ruth and Dore. The pawnbroker tells Ruth and Dore of the strange Hindu to whom he sold it. Dore decides that the Oriental is likely to return to India with it, and through the captain of the steamboat bound for the Orient. Everett again assists them with money for the voyage. Sir Donald Faversham, learning that Ruth is in Los Angeles, calls on her to renew their friendship, and learning that they are going to the Orient, he offers his services, he having
