marvellous. They seem to catch the real martial spirit, and cases are numerous where dogs have struggled home though grievously wounded and died after completing their task. In the Vosges and the Argonne a dog is indispensable to the sontinels.

To show what a difference they make. an instance is given of two regiments relieving each other alternately in a dangerous sector. The one which made liberal use of dogs never lost a sentry, and time after time were able, owing to their dogs, to surprise enemy patrols and to snipe sentinels. The other, who had no dogs, lost seven sentries in three days. . Some of the smartest surprises in the war were possible only owing to the assistance lent by dogs.

Sheepdogs of fifteen months to two years of age are the best, and they undergo a training according to the capacities they develop. Patrol and scouting dogs work indiscriminately with any detachment, but liaison dogs must always be kept with the man who taught them their work. Nearly all the dogs used were presented to the army, and weekly reports are made to their old masters as to the prowess they have displayed, and how they are faring.
