bank officials brought out very clearly the fact that the person who had a well preserved and painted property had a better credit rating and standing in the community. All the bankers were unan mous in the opinion that property kept in a good state of repair and paint entitles the owner to more consideration in a loan, that such property will sell for more money; and that it is an asset to the property owner in his financial dealings. One banker said that he found that as a man was, so were his buildings. The man who was slovenly about himself generally took no interest in the repair or condition of his buildings,

HE STARED, TOO.

"The biggest fire I've ever seen was at New York," said the American. "It was a very high building and the ladders were not tall enough to reach the window at which a lady was standing. We were just beginning to despair when a lucky thought seemed to strike one of the firemen. Catching hold of a hose, he took it alongside of the house and turned the nozzle upward so that a stream of water shot continuously past the window. Summoning up her courage the lady stepping from the ledge, and putting her arms and legs about the jet of water slid to the bottom and was saved." "Oh, that's nothing," said the Englishman. "I saw an ever more exciting rescue that that in London. A large hotel was burning furiously. when at the top storey of the building a girl appeared. I stared, the firemen stared, the policemen stared,in fact we all stared to hard that at last the girl walked down the stares."
