ABOUT THE LIBERTY LEAGUE

Directors of the Liberty League announce with deep solemnity that no one directly or indirectly interested in the liquor business may become a member of their organization or contribute to its funds.

His interest in finding a place where the business is being carried on is so keen as to be almost pathetic. In strict logic, therefore, the Liberty League cannot exist at all.

This may be counted as a frivolous aspect of the case and unworthy of consideration. The serious object of the League is to oppose prohibition and support "sane legislation."

In other words, the license system. It finds sense and sanity in the public sale of liquor; therefore it must consider the liquor-seller as a necessary person, one to be encouraged as a bulwark of mercantile society.

Liberty is the League's demand, full liberty for every British subject. It begins by restricting the liberty of a class of useful and necessary merchants. None of them formerly engaged in this reputable and benevolent business may join the League.

None may contribute to its funds. Now a League is the most open and most loosely organized of all human societies. Anyone can join the Navy League. Anyone can belong to the Civil Service Reform League. All people may join the Anti-Saloon League or the Dominion Alliance.

Why is the Liberty League so exclusive?

Surely if the liquor business is respectable and the liquor dealers are decent they have a right to plead with a misguided public. They have a right to associate as closely as possible with the men who want a drink, with the lawyers and politicians and editors who know the true beauty of the license system and whoop for the golden opportunities of freedom.

Unfortunately, the general public has a prejudice which the League must seek to overcome. While the license system was in operation people knew that many liquor sellers were law-breakers. A man who knew the ropes could get a drink at any time, Sunday or weekday, night or morning. The manufacturers and wholesalers did not hesitate to contribute freely to the funds of any party which would speak easy on the temperance question. Whiskey and crooked politics were constantly entangled.

For these public reasons—and for an infinity of private ones—the people reached the conclusion that the public sale of liquor was an intolerable nuisance, that restrictions did not restrict, and that revenue coming to the province and the municipalities from such a source was tainted and unwelcome.

That was one secret of the success obtained by local option. The people were sick of the liquor traffic, an insatiable leech feeding on the money and pith of the poor. Above all, they were sick of the liquor traffickers. That illness persists even yet. To calm the fevered mind of the great public the Liberty League puts its hand on its heart and says: "No booze peddlers walk with us. No booze money pays our organizers. We are patriots, eager to conserve for the common man the common liberties of British citizenship."

Translated it means this: "We are afraid that association with whiskey dealers would 'crab our game,' would destroy our influence with the public; therefore we renounce such people. But we play their hand just the same. We fight for the liberty of the common man—to make a hog of himself, to kick his wife downstairs, to starve his children. We do this solely for our own advantage, careless of the effect on the common man or the community, and solely because we like a 'snort' ourselves."

Make no mistake. The Liberty League is a pro-whiskey organization. It has reason to seek some means of placating the public, for the people of Ontario are in no friendly mood toward any group of men who would destroy the Ontario Temperance Act because their own appetites crave for liquor. — Toronto Globe.

HERE'S THE HERO.

EX-PT. C. E. WALDEN.

He arrived home from Toronto Monday night driving his new Briscoe Special machine which he recently won in the Daily World subscription campaign. The Standard extends hearty congratulations. Mr. Walden is one of our honorable returned heroes, and although he suffers considerably from the injuries received in the defence of his country, he NEVER complains. He worked hard in the recent subscription campaign, and met with remarkable support—although it was by no means an entire snub. He asks us to express his profound gratefulness to all who in any way, shape or form assisted him in winning his prize.
