Gertrude Came to Cherry Valley

BY FRED J. ST. JOHN

CHAPTER II.

Well, here's the point. I don't want to lose my good looks but I should lose them if I worked the way Mrs. Andrews does...

By this time, they had left Cherry Valley far behind and the lights of the city began to twinkle before them.

Presently John captured one of the dim white hands which did not propose to grow "worn out and old-looking."

"Little Girl! We've talked this over lots of times but I never saw things just as you have stated them until now. I don't see how this farm-work problem—for the women—is to be worked out but—I'll tell you. Come out to Cherry Valley and be a farmer's wife. We'll think things together and when we do, the Lord and the glory shall all be in our favor."

Her lips went white, but she did not move. She could not work any more without a doctor. What a life!

Examinations for Parents. A certain amount of responsibility for the success or failure of a child in school rests upon the parents; but there is no tribunal before which they can be arraigned or by which their grading in efficiency can be determined.

It might be profitable for the mother, especially, to make out a list of questions relating to her school duties to her children and, to the best of her judgment, give herself a mark upon each one.

The Half-Price Lady. A girl who was anxious to earn the necessary money for a few little things that she needed or greatly desired, after thinking the matter over for a while, hung a modest sign in the window of her home.

The average number of gloves received on week days, except Saturday is fifteen pairs, and on Saturday as many as sixty pairs.

Home Queries. Reader:—Can you tell me of any way of cleaning the edge of a comb which has become soiled by face and hands, without washing the whole over? What will clean oxidized lamp fixtures?

Mince Meat.—The following recipe for mince meat is the best I have ever tasted. You can make as large a quantity as you like.

The doctor called her attention to the flight of a flock of crows, over the group of substantial farm buildings that stood in a grove of splendid trees at the head of the valley.

Gertrude looked earnestly but not at the crows, for over there was John's place, Cherry Hill Farm, and the man who watched them from the big front veranda was John himself.

Gertrude made no attempt to analyze her own action, but went about with apparent enjoyment of the doctor's society.

On a sunny day in April in fact the day following John's trip to the city, the doctor came to take her for a drive. He proposed that they drive into the country.

super party is always welcome. Here is the recipe for a delicious meal that can be cooked either on a stove or in a chafing dish, and that will satisfy appetites made keen by the icy air:

Flake one and one-half cups of salt codfish and soak it one hour. Boil one cup of rice. Chop together two tablespoons of green pepper...

A Night in Winter. Smoke rises from each silhouetted stack. And streams of giant shapes across the sky.

The windows of the houses all are dark. No passing footfall mars the drifted snow. That glimmers with a faint reflected spark.
