SOME FAMOUS YOUNG. In This Condition Only a Tonic STERS OF THE PAST.

Youth Has Played a Striking Part in Scenes at Westminster.

Parliamentary correspondent.
It was young Benjamin Disraeli, afterwards our great Prime Minister, who, when little more than a lad, stood up in a striking costume of various colors, and in reply to rollicking, contemptuous shouts, cried, "One day you will listen to me!".

They did. The greatest and most polished orator of recent times in Parliament, Lord Roseberry, seconded the reply to the Speech from the Throne at the age of twnty-three. Sir Robert Peel, like Mr. Esmond Harmsworth, began his career at twenty-one; Pitt was Prime Minister in his early twenties; Charles, the second Earl Grey. was returned for Northumberland at twenty-two: the younger Pitt reached St. Stephen's when twenty-three; and the great Cladstone, again and again Prime Minister, also entered the House at twenty-three. Lord Byron made his first speech in the House of Lords at twenty-four; Lord Burnham, then Mr. Harry Lawson, entered Parliament at twenty-three.

The Waspish Welshman.

We have something of a parallel to this at the present day. Some years ago the very name of Joseph Chamberiain almost made the House of Commons shudder. He was the mighty man there, and his powerful personality seemed to dominate the House. What a terrific thing it would by to tackle the Parliamentary giant! Somewhere away, on a back bench, among a lot of obscurities, there was the House, who had entered it at the age of twenty-spren, and he tackled Chamberlain. This back bench young fellow was a daring spirit, fond of a

Looking round the House, as a man searching for the one he was to tackle, this waspish young debater tackled the biggest. As time went on this agile back-bencher began to be called a demagogue, "a vaspish Welshman," and "a little Welsh attorney." He is now Prime Minister!

The chance of the very young men is coming. The days of the Coalition are numbered. Before long there will be parties again and party fights. It is in the party fights, above all, that youth gets its real chance to flash its malden sword.

Winter Fire Protection.

Winter fires in barns, stables or out houses are usually caused by the knocking over or explosion of kerosone lamps or lapterns. Keep a few pails of dry sand on hand. Dry sand will not freeze. In the incipient stages of an oil fire, sand will smoth or, whoreas water will spread it.

"BOYS" IN BRITISH ARE YOU WEAK AND RUN DOWN

Medicine Can Renew Your Health.

The condition of being "run down s one that doctors do not recognize as a disease. The physician of to-day who gets his training in a hospital where only severe disorders are encountered knows little about it. But those who are run down in health know that it is not a fancied affliction.

At length John came across a little picture of which he was very fond, but which was too small to hang from the picture-rail. So he got a null, and immered it firmly into the wall. A few moments later there was a loud knock at the front door.
