Whom Did I Come From?

The question the child is bound to ask sooner or later. There are two ways of answering it. One way is to evade the question, telling the child that the story brought him or some such fiction. This is a bad way, for the child knows it is not true. If, at first, he does not know it is false, he will find it out.

The other way is to tell the truth. One who has answered the question of her child's parent with the simple statement "I came from Mother," says you were within his body and he came to his heart for a long time. She who says you were outside and he came to you, and that this is why his mother is not willing to be frank with him.

Every mother should tell her own children about the coming of new life and the should tell them before evil-minded persons have a chance to pollute their mind. The first impression that children get on this subject is the one that lasts. Make the coming of new life seem beautiful to your child. Tell him the story of the "new" life in a way that will give him a clear and true picture of the process. Do not let him hear the story from the lips of others who are not willing to be frank with him.

Teach the children to respect mother and to be tender and careful of all mothers. Tell them when passing by to be gentle with her and feet to be well and help her all they can. They will love the mothers they have thus.

Spitting the Spots.

The soft finish of much of the cloth now worn seems to have an affinity for dirt, but a slightly dampened whisk-broom is more efficient than one which is dry, and sometimes rubbing the cloth with a dry sponge is advised for threads, ravelings and that quickly adhere to the sponge.

Remove spots as soon as they occur. The following formula for a cleansing fluid is an excellent one: one-sixteenth of an ounce of salicylic ether, one-sixteenth of an ounce of oil of wintergreen, one-eighth of an ounce of alcohol, one-eighth of an ounce of turpentine. To avoid the risk so often left by a cleansing agent, apply the fluid to the clean surface, outside the spot, then rub toward the center.

When woolen garments have to be washed, a quick suds can be obtained by using pure soap flakes. Several brands of which are now on the market. The flakes are exceptionally nice for washing knitted goods and baby clothes. Dress gowns, and men's and boys' clothing can be washed with a decoction of soap-bark. To one ounce (costing about five cents) add one quart of boiling water. Allow this to steep for a while, strain through a cloth, then add to the water in which woolen clothes are washed.

Oil and paint spots can be removed with turpentine. Wax can be removed by first scraping the surface of the spot, then covering it with blotting paper and ironing over the place with a warm iron. The French chalk method is recommended for silk. Rubbed into the fibres of material it will remove many spots. After applying chalk several times, leave a fine layer on the spot about twelve hours, then brush off.

Don't Throw Away Old Window Shades.

Many house-furnishing stores will tell you that Holland shades are off the market. That is not quite true, but it is a fact that lines shades are scarce; many stores have no stocks of them at all, and when obtainable they are very high in price. This causes a housewife to hesitate about throwing away old shades that have become wrinkled, faded, and thin. Generally the trouble with the old shades is that the filler has dropped out of the linen.

Window shades that have deteriorated in this way can be made to look almost as good as new at small cost and with little trouble. Go to a paint store and buy a can of ordinary flat wall paint. Reduce it by adding twenty-five per cent. of turpentine. Remove the shades from the rollers, tack them down smoothly on a bare floor or table and apply one coat of the paint. To eliminate brush marks go over it immediately with a dry stiff bristled brush.

If it is desired to have the shades harmonize with the decoration or trim of the room, any color of flat paint may be obtained with which to accomplish it. It is possible to have the outside of the shade one color and the interior side different if preferred. By the adoption of this suggestion window shades can be kept looking bright and clean at the same time saving the expense of new ones.

PART II.
The fresh was shut. The night air was keen. Even in Fulham something exhilarating in the atmosphere.

Ninette was very close to Bill on a seat that faced the river. Old Father Thames lay gently at their feet and the lights of Putney Bridge twinkled at them in a friendly fashion. Ninette was smiling to herself, such a wonderful smile, and her hand rested through the man's arm, firm and strong and good to look upon, and he had grown strangely dear to her.

Bill was staring straight in front of him. At the touch of those soft fingers he was almost, unconsciously almost, the girl's head dropped forward against his shoulder.

A suppressed exclamation came from him. The next moment Ninette was laughing and in a fierce embrace. He was kissing her, he was kissing her, "I love you, Ninette, I love you," he cried joyfully.

William Dycart hummed a merry tune as he put up pounds of sugar in blue paper bags; the small boy, whom he called "Pats," grinned knowingly, and surreptitiously helped himself to some of the sugar.

And then someone came through the door with a high and dropped into a chair beside the counter. It was Ninette. Bill was at her side in a twinkling.

"Oh, Bill!" she gasped. Then she hid her head on his shoulder and began to cry.

Machine to Trap "Fibs."

Among the marvels of delicate mechanism is an apparatus invented by Dr. Augustus D. Waller, F.F.S., of the London University, by which it is possible to detect liars.

This is done by taking electric records of the effect of cross-examination on a criminal's nervous system to indicate whether he is telling the truth. Dr. Waller discovered that the resistance of the skin to electricity varies with the state of the emotions, and has so developed the discovery that even apprehension can plainly be "spotted" by the fluctuations of a spot of light on a scale.

Using this method, he has been able to prove an alibi. He will look the judge in the eye and say he was never away at Chelsea in his life. Now we apply our method. Attach the electric wires to his hands and then show him five pictures, including one of the place the criminal was suspected of having visited. The others will give negative results, but when he is shown that particular one the result will be that the light will jump—and there is no power in mortal man to stop it.

Character in Thumbs.
Many traits of a person's character are revealed by the hands. The thumb is itself an interesting indicator. Small and weak thumbs denote a character full of weakness, mental and physical, but the well-developed, well-shaped, fairly thick, and correspondingly long thumb foretells an evenly-balanced character, with good intellectual powers, together with a sense of refinement and culture.

Is Handkerchief Dangerous?
When you have been suffering from a cold, have you noticed what a long time it hangs about?
The handkerchief is responsible, for each time you use it you reflect yourself. No one would think of cleansing a wound and then replacing the dirty bandage on it, yet that is what we do when we continue to use the same handkerchief for a cold.

WHAT IS YOUR OPINION OF THE AGE WHEN MAN IS AT THE BRINK OF DEATH?

SPRITS THAT LIVE IN THE BRAIN
EACH HAS OWN SPECIAL DUTIES.

When a person is at the brink of death, the most striking feature is the way in which the body seems to be "shut down." The organs of the body, which have been working so busily, seem to be "switched off," and the person appears to be in a state of "coma." This is due to the fact that the "sprits" that live in the brain, which have been working so busily, seem to be "switched off," and the person appears to be in a state of "coma."
