SETS OF PLANTS FROM ROYAL FAMILY.

Gardeners Are on Lookout For Relics of Elizabethan Period.

The trenching operations necessary to the laying out of an old Elizabethan "Knott-Garden" at the Place, Stratford-on-Avon, the site of a chamber or receptacle, 10 feet by six feet broad, have lately discovered about two and one-half feet below the present level of ground. That the walls are, parting, parts of Shakespeare's time is evident from the lower part of the trench exhibiting the characteristics of Tudor times; that is, of the size, shape and quality of stones laid in the old English granite lines of "headers" and "stretcher," with wide mortar joints. A writer in The London Gazette dividing the chamber, was a more modern wall, placed at the end of the eighteenth century.

Shakespeare's Irrigation Plant. In this case, this receptacle, it is difficult to arrive at any exact figure, though it was probably connected with the garden—perhaps a garter. The soil is a brick red, very fine, and about a half foot deep, in which water rises to a height of 18 inches. This, which was discovered a few years ago, is certainly of Shakespeare's time, and doubtless used for watering his garden. To improve it is now to be devoted.

From this excavation, not so far advanced as might have been expected, has been brought to light by excavators probably owing to the soil, for a depth of 18 inches, all made ground, and a very remote period, the stone shells, nor the bones which have been unearthingly ascribed to the Elizabethan's table, nor the suspect clay tobacco pipes, nor pipes never mentioned, was probably not a discovered, however, the complete skeleton of a small animal, which quadruped, Shakespeare, we next uncovered, was definitely, as that of the deer he had been peacock by Shakespeare, a youth, from the neighborhood of Sir Thomas Lucy of the same.

The skeleton, however, was turned out to be nothing quite as interesting than that of a dog, and a late eighteenth century at that! Archaeologists, however, are on the alert, and strict care has been given to the garments to examine every article for the smallest trace of anything unusual. Shakespeare, from many allusions and a thorough knowledge of the practical art of pruning especially, any old pruner's garden tool of that period, he unearthing it will be treasured.

Building By-laws Should be Enforced.

In most of our cities and towns a building code exists. The ostensible purpose is the regulation of building, prevention of fire danger to life and property, and the conservation of health.

It is interesting to note, from the report of the last annual meeting of the Dominion Association of Fire Chiefs, the efforts which are made to evade the provision of the building code and the success which attends these efforts. Many of these fire chiefs, experts in fire prevention, gave their experiences.

One fire chief said: "Your municipality will sit for hours and draw up building by-laws, and, in the next 24 hours, when they meet again, they are all cast aside, so that some building may be erected in contravention of the by-laws. There are lots of aldermen who do not want to break these by-laws, but simply because Mr. Smith or Mr. Jones is a friend of theirs, they do it." Another alderman said: "There was a rooming house that I did not approve of. The aldermen over said they would not sleep in the building, but, before my time, a license had been granted, and they said if I did not approve of it, it would bankrupt the man who built it. I pointed out that they were putting dollars ahead of lives. I was then dismissed from the city for not approving of that."

In interpreting the amendment to the Criminal Code passed at the last session of Parliament, Mr. G. D. Fladley, Superintendent of Insurance, speaking at the meeting of the Dominion Fire Prevention Committee, said: "Under the first clause, any person upon whom premises fire occurs is deemed to have caused the fire by negligence if he has failed to comply with any regulations designed to prevent fire. Non-compliance is the proof of negligence, and this is a question of fact to be determined by a jury. Notification of a breach of the law is not provided for, as every person is presumed to be familiar with the law."

In view of the experience of the fire chiefs above noted, well may it be said, as expressed by Mr. W. H. Shapley, Chairman of the Fire Prevention Committee, that "the change that has been made in the Criminal Code should have a good effect if we can find anyone loyal enough to the interests of the Dominion to enforce the law."
