EDITORIAL RETURNED SOLDIERS

The returned soldier and how best to help him is a live question. Two of our Markdale heroes are making good in this way: One, William Wells, whose wife died of flu during his absence overseas leaving six children, has secured a rural mail route, and during the summer months his eldest, a girl of 14 years, acts as courier, and he himself is night watch at a saw mill in town. The other, James B. Leggatte, also secured a mail route, and his wife efficiently acts as courier, on a heavy route, while he works as section man of the railway. In this way they are both making good in a commendable fashion, and we have others locally making good.

ABOUT WOOL

Canadian wool brought 75 and 80 cents in war years compared with 20 cents in 1914. A big demand for khaki cloth caused the great increase in price, but all wool cloth went up extravagantly. Canada was producing one hundred and five million pounds of wool, much of it of an inferior grade. Before the war ended Canadian fleeces had increased over three-fold, producing over three hundred and fifty million pounds of wool of a superior quality. Prices then dropped back to about 37 cents a pound. The price of wool goods must necessarily come down, but it will take time.

CHURCH UNION

Synods, Assemblies and Conferences of various religious bodies recently in session have not taken hold of this important question with the earnestness and devotion which we consider it deserves. The reason may, in a measure at least, be attributed to the fact that as a rule in towns and cities there is place and need of all the churches they have, and from these larger centres comes a preponderating weight of influence and debating ability. The fact however remains that in hundreds of instances in rural districts and especially in the West there are from two to four congregations struggling for existence where one would be ample. In mercantile lines and even in newspaper amalgamations are taking place and surplus concerns either going to the wall or out of business, but in the really more important line, the religious world, progress is painfully slow.

Japan stands by British Alliance. Dominion Parliament is likely to remain in session until the middle of July.

Hanover Council proposes an expenditure of $65,000 for improvement of its waterworks system and fire protection.

A very interesting and successful Historical Exhibition in connection with the Convention of the Royal Historical Society in Owen Sound, was held last week.

G. B. Ryan, of Guelph, who for 35 years has been one of the leading merchants of Guelph, died in a New York Hospital on Saturday following a serious operation.

Here's a witty conundrum worth repeating: "Why were the American soldiers called Doughboys?" "Well, I guess it was because they were kneaded in 1914, and didn't rise till 1918."

Rev. Dr. Salem Bond, of Broadway Tabernacle, Methodist Church, Toronto, has been asked by the Independent Labor Party to be their candidate for the vacant Legislature seat in North Toronto.
