The Welfare of the Home

Play Lessons for Little Children.

By MARION FLORENCE LANSING, M.A.

When the older children of the home and neighborhood go back to school in the autumn, the mother is often taxed to find occupations which will fill in the gap for the active two-, three-, or four-year-old who misses their companionship. This is just the time to delight his heart and satisfy his unconscious desires and needs by starting him on a set of simple play lessons. For these the mother needs no elaborate material or schoolroom training. She can find in her own home and experience both the tools and the skill for their use.

Every mother lives over with her children the experience of each human being in discovering and adapting himself to the world about him. Let her pause and take thought of a few of the common facts with which her child must become familiar. One is an appreciation of the relative sizes of things. Think how you would feel if you had never consciously entertained the idea of size and it suddenly dawned upon you one day that two objects which had seemed alike yesterday were in fact of different sizes. One was slightly larger than the other. You would have a new testing rod with which to try out the world. Give the moment awaiting development. Other plays with duplicate spoons or blocks introduce the idea of matching things, selecting one and finding its twin. Then we come to sorting and here are opportunities for a variety of plays. Mix from the kitchen supply closed, brown, white, and saucelad beans; provide three "nesticles" into which to sort them. Make a play set from your button box. Children's delicate fingers are quickly susceptible to differences in textures. Go to your piece bag and get squares (patchwork size) of cotton, flannel, velvet, corduroy, burles, chamois silk, leather, and silk, to be sorted into pieces by kind, first by touch and sight, then by touch alone. Color plays can be of only the primary colors, red, orange, yellow, green, blue and violet.

The whole secret of home education for little children is for the mother to meet awakening instincts and powers with play supplies and play suggestions. "The A B C of things" words. Nothing his mother's care gets his view out and travel with the read of investigation and precipitation of the interesting you about him.

Businesses in Living Feed Cattle. Cattle feeding is a business that must be done right. Many different types of feed are used, and it is important to choose the right one for your cattle. The quality of the feed will affect the health and productivity of your cattle. It is also important to feed your cattle at the right time and in the right amounts. This will help them to stay healthy and productive throughout the year.

Remember, in your cattle you have a money-making, or a money-losing machine, and their ability to make money depends on the care and feed you give them. If they have a good dry bed where they can lay down in comfort and with less feed. And then another essential thing is kindness. Pet your cattle and handle them much, always being kind to them. They appreciate it and will reward you by putting on a few more pounds of flesh.

In regard to feed, I would say by all means feed a balanced ration. While corn is one of the most essential feeds, it is by no means the only feed, and should never be fed alone. There are several feeds that should be used in connection with corn. And the more variety of feeds used the better results as a rule.

Cottonseed meal should be used and especially if cattle are fed on pasture, as it is somewhat binding and cattle are not as apt to scour. Oil meal is good, but it is somewhat of a laxative. Both are good. Bran and oats are also good and should be used in connection with corn. And if roots are available they, too, can be used to good advantage. As for roughage, good alfalfa hay and corn silage leads them all.

Now, in starting to feed one should be very careful. Don't try to get them on full feed too quickly. Better to have a full month or longer than to get some of them off-feed and perhaps scouring. For if so, they will lose more in one day than can be put on in the next week. Cattle rightly started while on good pasture, will gain faster on the same amount of feed than dry-lot-fed cattle. And here again you save the labor and expense of putting on the hay they eat like the self-feeders after the cattle are on full feed. It is
