ABOUT WEANING FOALS

They Should be Nursed at Least Four Months.

A Sudden Change of Diet Not Good for the Young Colt—Wean Him Gradually—General Hints on Rationing and Handling.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE age at which foals should be weaned is to a great degree governed by circumstances. Under ordinary conditions it is well to allow the mare to nurse her foal for four months or longer. If, when the foal is this long, the mare is required to do regular work, both will do better if the foal be weaned. On the other hand, if the mare be in fair condition, not required for regular work, and still yielding a reasonable quantity of milk, the foal will do better if not weaned, for a month or two longer, and the dam, having no labor to perform, will not suffer.

The ordinary process of weaning, which consists in separating the mare and foal, and allowing no further intercourse for several weeks, or until the mare has ceased to secrete milk, and the foal to look for it, is in our opinion, irrational, wasteful and uncleanly.

It is probably unnecessary to state that the colt should be taught to eat chopped or rolled oats, bran, etc., before the process of weaning commences, otherwise he will surely suffer and grow thin. Experience has taught all breeders and feeders of stock that sudden or violent changes of diet for horses, with any degree of rapidity, are, and often expensive. When this is the case with adult animals, it is reasonable to expect it to be more marked in the young. Hence, in order to avoid danger of digestive disease, hiccups, colic, and trouble with the urinary glands, and possibly digestive trouble also, in the dam, we should exercise good judgement, and be satisfied to take considerable trouble when weaning the colt.

In such cases the mammary apparatus is still quite active, and a considerable quantity of milk is being secreted when the owner decides that it is time to wean the colt. In addition to the grass and grain that it has been consuming, has thus far been accustomed to milk also. In fact, milk has been his principal diet, and, if suddenly deprived of it, he cannot but be in a failing condition. Then again, the secretion of milk in the mare will not cease all at once, and, unless the glands be relieved of it, mammitis will be the result. Instead of milking the mare by hand, and of having the milk no use of it, as is usually done, the colt should get the benefit of our idea of the proper method of weaning is as follows:

When it is decided that the colt shall be weaned, he should be put in a comfortable box stall, by himself, or with other colts that are being weaned. There should be no mangers or boxes into which he can rear or jump, and probably injure himself, and the dam and foal should be so arranged that he cannot jump over them or get his fore feet over. The dam should be led, in a stall, or better, if convenient, kept in a box stall, not necessarily far removed from her foal. In fact, the writer has seen a practice of having the stalls adjoining, so that the dam and foal can see and hear each other, but cannot get together. Whether or not the mare be required for work, she should be kept in the stall, or better, the colt lead to the dam's stall, and allowed to remain for 15 to 20 minutes three times daily for a week or longer. Leading the colt to the dam's stall, is a good system, and, in a stall, the colt should be gradually accustomed to the amount of whole business practically inactive. In this way each gradually becomes accustomed to be separated from the other. The change of diet for the colt is gradual, and he receives the benefit of the milk until the normal danger of mammitis in the mare, and the glands gradually become inactive. In the meantime the colt should be allowed about all the well-saved clover hay and alfalfa that he will consume. A satisfactory and palatable mixture is made by putting a little cut hay and the ration of oats in a pail in the evening, pouring some boiling water on it, covering with a rubber sheet and allowing it to stand until morning, then preparing another feed for the evening. This, with a ration of whole oats, with a carrot or two at noon, in addition to the amount of whole hay he will require, usually gives excellent results. Of course, this regimen is not convenient the colt will do very well without the preparation of foal feed. When practicable, the addition of cow's milk gives excellent results, but this is often not easily obtainable.

After the colt has ceased looking for his dam, he should be allowed to take fully exercised in a yard or paddock, and his feet should be trimmed at least monthly. Usually under these conditions, the wear is not equal to the growth, and if not attended to, the feet will become abnormal in size and shape, which may permanently injure him. Hence they should be trimmed to the natural size and shape, as conditions demand.—Prof. J. H. Reed, V.S., O. A. College, Guelph.

FARM BUTTER AT FAIRS

Hints for Farmers' Wives With Dairy Exhibits.

Flavor in Butter of First Importance—Firmness Also a Strong Point—How to Cure and Pack in Best Condition for Showing.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

TO show or not to show, that is the question many a woman thinks over as the time draws near for the holding of the annual fair.

There are some who would not miss the event, and make entries in many classes; while others are rather timid about exhibiting, especially if they are doing it for the first time.

Let us take the exhibiting of butter. Sometimes a woman goes home from the fair feeling rather hurt because some neighbor took more and higher prizes than she did. She thought that her butter was good, but the other must have been considered better by the one who was acting as judge.

There are times when a judge has to mark very closely to place the prizes.

Score cards are not used at all of our fairs, nor do all judges use the same score card, but the one proposed by the National Dairy Council reads as follows: as regards points awarded:

Flavor	45
Texture	15
Incorporation of moisture	10
Color	10
Salting	10
Packing	10
Total	100

The flavor of the butter is a very important point to consider. It should be clean and sweet without being "any kind."

An objectionable flavor, no matter how slight, would prevent one receiving a full score. Some defects in flavor are more serious than others, but many of these could be avoided by taking a little more care.

The "care" in the stable and in the separator room is just as important as the churning or the holding of the butter afterwards.

If a judge should find two lots of butter with the same total score he would give the higher place to the lot with the better flavor.

The texture of the butter is another point that is taken into consideration. Butter should have good body—firm and waxy.

You have cut butter that looked good and remained firm on the plate, but you have also seen just the opposite to this—butter that had a greasy appearance, the drops of moisture large and milky, and it became soft when left in the plate for a short time.

The judge comes across just as great contrasts when going through the exhibits and he scores accordingly.

To secure good texture it is necessary to make use of suitable temperatures and to work the butter in the right way. Cool the cream immediately after separating and churn it at a temperature that will bring the butter in nice firm granules in 20 to 30 minutes. (Too high temperature means soft butter and greater loss in the buttermilk.)

The temperature of the wash water should be such that it will not make the butter too hard or too soft when working. Work the butter by pressing it carefully and evenly. A slight rubbing motion will tend to make the butter firm and waxy. Overworking should also be avoided. Butter is worked to make it compact and to distribute the salt and moisture evenly. When butter is cut the surface should be closed and the drops of moisture should be clear and very minute.

The color of the butter should be even and bright. If the butters are not worked enough the color will be uneven, although this is not noticeable at the time of weighing.

If the butter is too soft, the salt should be mixed through it, and the butter placed where it will come to a proper heat in a working.

Since this it will score higher for both texture and color than if worked in the soft state. The salt in the butter should be evenly distributed and thoroughly dissolved. It is better to have the butter worked very lightly than to have it over-salted. The popular butter at the present time has mild clean flavor, close body and light salting.

The finish or packing should also be considered. In fact, the judge will notice the appearance of the exhibit before he has had time to draw out a plug of butter on his trier. Let the prints be well made—solid, even, with clear-cut corners and the papers wrapped neatly.

Butter tubs and boxes require a lining of parchment paper, and crocks should be in good condition, free from cracks or breaks in the glazing.

The top of a large package should be smoothly finished and covered neatly with parchment paper.

Butter for exhibition should be made two days or more before the fair to give it time to become set. It should be kept in a clean cool place on the farm, and be brought to the fair in the best possible condition.

Butter made and cared for in this way will score higher than it would if made the morning of the fair, as is sometimes the case.

Do not feel discouraged if you do not secure the prizes that you hoped to win. Try again, remembering the little rhyme which says,

"Good, better, best, never let it rest,
Till your good is better, and your better, best."

—Miss Belle Miller, O. A. College, Guelph.

THE APPEAL OF THE LAMBETH CONFERENCE.

could possibly be taken to repudiate his past ministry. God forbid that any man should repudiate a past experience rich in spiritual blessings for himself and others. Nor would any of his brethren, honoring the Holy Spirit of God whose call led us all to our several ministries, and whose power enabled us to perform them. We shall be publicly and formally seeking additional recognition of a new call to wider service. In a reunited Church, and imploring for ourselves God's grace and strength to fulfill the same."

In considering this remarkable utterance, we cannot fail to be impressed with its manifest sincerity, and with the widening of Christian outlook which has come to our sister Church. So far as we can remember, this is the first time that Church has officially admitted that the non-Episcopal Churches are essential parts of the whole Catholic Church. And while the suggestion is made that ministers in non-Episcopal Churches should receive Episcopal ordination, it is expressly stated that this is not meant to imply that their past ministry has been either "invalid or unsatisfactory"; and, moreover, the sting is taken out of the suggestion by the assertion that the bishops and clergy of the Anglican Church would be willing to accept from the authorities in non-Episcopal Churches, for a commission of recognition, which would enable them to minister to these churches. Whether this means that they will be willing to submit to non-Episcopal ordination we cannot say, but it seems to lean that way.

As we view it, the great facts emphasized by the appeal are: First, that the Anglican Church is prepared to fully acknowledge that the non-Episcopal Churches are really a part of the Catholic Church; secondly, that the ministries of these Churches are not invalid; and, lastly, that they are prepared to discuss them upon common ground, when each group must be prepared to make sacrifices for the sake of a common fellowship, a common ministry, and a common service to the world.

This appeal for union will not fall upon deaf ears, and it will probably lead to some much more wide-reaching conferences, to discuss and deal with the matter. The Anglican Church has spoken, and it will now be in order for the other Churches to respond. It is manifest that a compromise must be a compromise. Neither the Episcopal nor the non-Episcopal Churches can lay down the laws which should govern it. There will have to be compromise, and the will not all be gratified by one side. But we think the great Anglican Church has acted wisely in recognizing the demand of the age for a united Christian union, and even if organic union may be a great way off, a spirit of co-operation may be introduced which will pave the way for a real union.

In the meantime, in Canada, Britain, Australia, and the United States, we trust the cause of Church Union will be pushed forward as speedily as possible. There are unions, which have been under consideration for years, which ought to be consummated speedily, and this appeal of the Anglican Church should have the effect of accelerating such unions. Each union which is consummated opens naturally to prepare the way for another and more far-reaching one. The whole Christian world is beginning to see that our present ecclesiastical divisions are often a real hindrance to the work of the Kingdom—Christianity.
