The habit of leaving your work at night without having done your best, of turning out day after day, work that does not meet with your approval, is demoralizing to your character and fatal to your chances of advancement.

Don't be satisfied with anything less than your best. Make it a rule that you will have reason to be proud of your day's work because you have put your best into it, the highest of it with flaws; don't compel yourself to go home at night regretting a poor day's work, a botched job. You can't afford it; it will haunt you so that you cannot enjoy your home or your recreation.

Why Sands Sing.

The eastern side of Lake Michigan s fringed with sands that sing. One has only to walk on them when they are dry, or thrust a stick into them, to produce a musical sound. Various explanations of this pheno menon have been put forward. The most plausible is that advanced by Mr. W. D. Richardson, who has noted that the sands do not sing beyond the line reached by driftwood. There must be some relation beween the periodical wetting of the sands and the sounds they emit. It has, therefore, been concluded that the lake water deposits a thin film of salt upon the grains of sand. When the grains are rubbed together the film creates considerable friction. The. effect, is similar to that of rosin on a violin bow.
