THE SHIRT-MAKER

By Don Mark Lemon

The physician spoke bluntly. "You must have a vacation. Get out into the country and do nothing for a few weeks. You have run yourself down with overwork."

"Overwork? Hardly that, doctor. I do not work at all. I read and reflect all day."

The physician's attention was riveted on the patient's languid face. "Now, you're wearing out, but resting up?"

"Yes, doctor."

The physician demanded: "You say you read and reflect all day. What do you do all night?"

"Sleep!" was the brief answer.

The physician stared incredulously when the patient leaned forward and spoke rapidly. "I have said I do not work, doctor. That is both true and false. In my waking hours I do nothing in particular. I have a modest but steady income, and I need not lift my hand for a living, but in my sleep no sweatshop slave toils as I do. It is in my sleep, the moment I fall asleep, and all night I am driven without a moment's rest, so that when I awake in the morning I am often too tired to get out of bed."

The physician's face had cleared and clouded again during this discovery. "So you work at night in your sleep," he mused. "People don't often do that unless they're overworked daylong. What kind of work are you engaged in in your sleep?"

"I make cheap shirts," the physician betrayed his astonishment by a start that brought him upright in his chair. "You might call shirt-making a light you could recognize," suggested the physician, thinking to drive his patient into a corner of absurdity.

Instead of being offended, the patient grasped eagerly at the suggestion. "I will, doctor, I will!" He unbuttoned his vest. "Look here, I'll run the thread across here, making a little triangle."

"You would seem to have more need of a detective than a doctor," said the physician.

"Not so. I have come to you for medicine to make me sleep—sleep so soundly that no power can drag my astral from my body. I must have rest or my brain will snap, and some morning they will find me dead in bed."

The physician arose and touched his patient on the shoulder. "Don't talk of death while there is sleep. I will give you a powerful opiate for a few nights and we may break up this business. Meanwhile, mark the shirts as you have planned and don't worry."

When the patient had taken his leave the physician shook his head thoughtfully. "He does nothing all day, so nature has put him to work in his sleep. Well, let him do a little worth while and he won't have to do much worth nothing."

It was evident that the physician placed no faith in his patient's fears, and when, a week later, he learned that the man had been found dead in bed, with haggard face and toll-worn body, he still considered the case to have been purely pathological.

But shortly afterward, as the physician stepped into a large department store to escape a sudden shower, his attention was attracted by a counter piled with men's cheap shirts, and, pausing a moment and casually examining one, he was shocked to note that the thread had been worked at the tab in the form of a small triangle, such as his patient had decided upon as a possible means of authenticating his sub-conscious labor.

He purchased the garment and, after the most careful enquiry, for the shirt bore no maker's mark, succeeded in locating the sweatshop where it had been manufactured. But here his search abruptly ended. He found a gang of workmen tearing down the fire-charred ruins of the sweatshop, and inquiry at the nearest fire station elicited the fact that the building had been gutted by flames the same night that his former patient had died in his bed.

"Do you know the cause of the fire?" he asked.

The fireman scratched his chin. "Guess I do! Got a shock myself. The old boss must have been crazy, up there at 2 a.m., with every machine going with electricity and not a shirt-cutter or a shirt-sewer in sight. We had to turn the hose on him to run him out of the place. Never saw such a whiskered old viper! But the boys think it's mighty queer he didn't have any insurance on his sweatshop. Must have been making money pretty easy not to take out an insurance in the fire zone."

The physician turned away slowly, meditating the coincidence of the thing.

A Practical Reason.

Some school children were having a lesson on the Garden of Eden, and had been told about the forbidden fruit.

When asked by the teacher why the fruit was forbidden, one little girl piped out: "Specks they were 'cookers', teacher."

Fish Scales Used.

Nothing hitherto has been deemed more worthless than fish scales; yet the commercial fishermen now find a market for them at a very satisfactory price, fifty cents a pound.

It should be said, however, that only the scales of some species of fish, such as the shad, the river herring and the sea herring, have value. These silvery scales are now systematically saved by the fishermen of Maine, Massachusetts and Virginia, and during the last year six tons of albino scales alone were thus collected and sold.

The scales are used in the manufacture of "pearl essence," which is the material employed for lining the glass globes commonly sold as imitation pearls. It is a beautifully iridescent substance, and, separated from the scales by chemical means, is utilized in the form of a slightly milky fluid which looks as if shot with all the hues of the rainbow.

Dye Dress, Skirt or Faded Curtains in Diamond Dyes

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her worn, shabby dresses, skirts, waists, coats, stockings, sweaters, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything, even if she has never dyed before. Tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton or mixed goods.

A Terrible Shock.

Mrs. Borem (buying a railway ticket): "What became of the ticket-clerk who used to be at this window?"

"Ticket-clerk—He's in a lunatic asylum."

"You don't say so! What was the reason?"

"A shock."

"Shock, eh?"

"Yes. One day last week a woman came to his window, bought a ticket, paid for it, and walked away without stopping to ask a string of questions."
