

Every Man For Himself

By HOPKINS MOORHOUSE

Phil looked up at last, aware that the girl was speaking, tense with eagerness.

"I wanted you to know the truth, Mr. Kendrick," she was saying, "if only that it will help you to understand how serious I consider the news which I'm bringing—this new deal that is pending, I mean. The Recorder must act at once to stop it. It is better that your uncle face the charges if they now stand than to have this law and blackest mark against him. I hope you agree with me?"

"Decidedly," nodded Kendrick. "What you have told me, Miss Lawson, has—well, kind of knocked the wind out of me. I can scarcely credit it. Even yet, I am hoping against hope that it is not as bad as the evidence seems to indicate. But one thing is certain, there is no use in attempting to do anything but face the music. If my uncle is guilty, he will have to pay the price there can be no compromise between right and wrong. On the other hand—well, false accusations never do an honest man."

"He was entirely unconscious," he was quoting Blatch Ferguson. Inactively held out her hand, her eyes glowing.

"I am glad to hear you say that," she said softly. "Somehow, I feel that you are taking it that way."

"There is one thing I cannot force myself to believe," he asserted confidently. "That is that Uncle Mitt would have any dealings with this man, Rick."

"That seems to disagree with what you have just said," she interrupted. "You said that you were not sure of the man's guilt, but now you are saying that you believe he is guilty?"

"I am not saying that," she said. "I am only saying that I believe that you are not sure of the man's guilt, but now you are saying that you believe he is guilty?"

"I am not saying that," she said. "I am only saying that I believe that you are not sure of the man's guilt, but now you are saying that you believe he is guilty?"

"I am not saying that," she said. "I am only saying that I believe that you are not sure of the man's guilt, but now you are saying that you believe he is guilty?"

"I am not saying that," she said. "I am only saying that I believe that you are not sure of the man's guilt, but now you are saying that you believe he is guilty?"

CHAPTER XXIII

The Fight.

Kendrick joined McCorquodale on the run. It needed but a glance over the rock to observe two members of the gang approaching the base of the hill through the woods, one carrying a flaring pine-knot torch, the other a piece of white canvas tied to a stick. They were coming for a parley.

"Phil summoned his little party around him for a hasty council of war. It looked to be his good opportunity. He was entirely unconscious," he was quoting Blatch Ferguson. Inactively held out her hand, her eyes glowing.

"We'll jolly them along as well as we can to give the rest of you as much time as possible. How does it strike you, Miss Lawson. Is the ankle both-er you at all?"

"The ankle was quite sure of herself. The ankle was quite sure of herself. The ankle was quite sure of herself."

"In that case I can be of greater service as a rear-guard," said Kendrick. "Svenson's canoe is probably large enough for the three of you without overloading. It's really built for four, isn't it, Svenson?"

"You bet your life," answered Svenson. "I'll have to take care of the canoe, but I'll have to take care of the canoe, but I'll have to take care of the canoe."

"Svenson, listen to me carefully, now. You are to make it your first business to protect Miss Lawson—at any cost. If you are discovered by a centry, silence him before he makes a noise. If you can't find your own canoe, take any one you see, you find one, then run up to the bushes to the left of the trail, not far from the that rock. It'll only hold two; so you get Jimmie and Miss Lawson aboard, then jump back here. Your under-standings?"

"Not unless you can possibly get away from here," he said. "Remember, if it comes to a showdown, Miss Lawson—if you are discovered—you are to slip out of sight into the woods immediately. And that means immediately. Don't wait for anything. Stiles and Svenson will hold them back long enough for you to reach a canoe. And for God's sake, get in and away as fast as you can go. You are the one on whom most depend, remember. You must get away without fail, no matter what happens to the rest of us."

About the House

Removing Stains.

Rest stains on white goods are not hard to remove. Apply a solution of citric acid, one part to twenty parts of water. After the spot has disappeared wash in warm water. Sometimes when the color of the fabric has been destroyed by acid, ammonia applied at once will restore it. It proves obstinate apply chloroform.

Oil of turpentine will remove the spots and iodine stains on white goods. Can be taken off by washing with alcohol. Lemon and salt will remove ink stains, and tomato juice is a good remedy. Blood stains on white dresses should be soaked in petroleum and then washed in hot water. When fruit stains the table linen, cover immediately with salt. In removing black ink from colored garments cover immediately with red ink and not a trace of either ink will remain. Test your goods first, though. Stains caused by lemon or orange juice will usually respond to an application of one part ammonia to twenty parts of water. Ammonia will remove the grass stains on white goods, and buttermilk and salt, mildew spots. If you drop a tiny bit of cream on your gown, touch the spot with ammonia and iron over with a hot iron. For a raspberry or strawberry stain rub a little starch on the spot with the hand. If it is left on for several hours, brush off and repeat until the spot has disappeared. Ordinary stains on silk may be removed by using spirits of turpentine. Always remember when using turpentine, gasoline, or benzine for spots; to put a blotting paper underneath and thus do away with the ring around the spot. A white cloth spotted with brown dye was restored by rinsing in Javelle water, and then rinsing again in clear water in which a little ammonia has been added. One must act quickly when rinsing in Javelle water for if the work is slow the gown may be ruined. Javelle water is made of one part chlorine bleach and ten parts of water. Then one part of washing soda is dissolved in four parts of water. Allow this to settle and pour off the liquid into a jar with the first mixture and keep covered. Ground rice is good for cleaning white flannels that you do not want to wash. Rub in, let the garment lay for a day or so and brush off. Repeat if not clean.

Minard's Liniment for Dandruff.

Run Entirely by Women.

A unique (taxicab) organization, directed and operated solely by women, has been formed under the presidency of Mrs. Ralph Smith, member of the Provincial Legislature of British Columbia. The company has been incorporated under a provincial charter. The drivers were ambulance drivers in France and skilled mechanics.

Minard's Liniment for Burns, etc.

Reason Why.

Patrick Milna was at the range for the first time, and out of twenty-one rounds he never hit the target once. An officer on looking over the book, said: "You have missed the target every shot. What is the reason?" "Well, sir," said Pat, "the only reason I can think of is that the man who stuck up the targets hasn't put them in a straight line from here."

HOW THEY BROKE THE MIGHTY GUNS

GIGANTIC FORTIFICATIONS OF HELIGOLAND.

Work of Demobilization Begun in February, 1920, and Now Nearing Completion.

Gone are the glories of the German naval greatness—the Kaiser's project, the fortification of Heligoland as a perpetual menace to Britain's sea power.

For the last of the magnificent fortifications which made Heligoland invulnerable has been destroyed by the order, and now the island, white-briar with dead trees, is the home of a peaceful settlement.

When the British fleet entered the German ocean in 1890 it was the North Sea fleet, and the forts of Heligoland were the key to the British Empire. The British navy, which had created the Heligoland forts, had also created the Heligoland forts, which had created the Heligoland forts.

Unique Prize Contest.

New uses for shoe polish! Such is the basis for a novel prize contest recently launched by the F. F. Dalley Company, manufacturers of the famous 2 in 1 Shoe Polish.

For instance, it has been found that 2 in 1 Black is excellent for polishing motor cars, refinishing suit cases, kodaks, black gloves, rubbers and hats. The Tan Paste is highly recommended for polishing furniture, hardwood floors, and auto tires, while the White, cake or liquid, has been used with good results on stains in white skirts, white kid gloves, polishing silver, window glass, and in cleaning automobile tires and straw hats.

So impressed have the manufacturers become with its possibilities, they are now offering $2,000 in cash prizes for the discovery of new ways of using their shoe polish.

One would imagine that shoe polish is used exclusively for shining shoes, but that is not the case as has been amply proved by the Dalley Company.

This contest came through the medium of letters received from people who, in the course of an experimental tour of mind, found that 2 in 1 could be used to great profit in various ways.

Good Roads in Quebec.

The province of Quebec, in 1921, laid down 416 miles of good roads, of which 55.5 miles were waterbound, macadam, 222.7 miles were gravel, 12.8 miles were concrete, and 6.9 miles were macadam with cold patch. Over 4,000 miles of good roads are now being kept in thorough repair in Quebec province.
