P.R. steamship Minnedosa, on Friday escorted us to the different points of May 12th, and during the evening of interest. We had the privilege of walking around the walls of Derry. Quebec Bridge, some three miles distant from the city of Quebed. This, 1688-9 was entirely within those walls the same day we passed under the Quebec Bridge, some three miles distant from the city of Quebed. This, as your readers already know, is probably the largest bridge of its kind in the world and certainly reflects much credit to its designers and builders, who, by the way, are Canadians. A few moments later we arrive at Quebec where we remain a short time to take on passengers, this is our last port of call until we arrive at Liverpool. There was exceptionally fine wear there during our chine voyage and glad to say that Mrs. Fawcett Master, Lloyd Tawcett and the writer didn't miss a meal and furthermore enjoyed every moment. We were very fortunate in not encountering any fog, which is very unusual at this season. We were also free from leebergs, al.

British mark.

Regarding the selling of livestock.

Regarding the selling of livestock in Ireland, their method is different to that of ours in that they have what they call fairs in the different villages and towns, which are held monthly. The farmer brings in any horses, cattle sheep or pirs which he monthly. The farmer brings in any horses, cattle, sheep or pigs which he wishes to dispose of. Each [air village or town has what is called a Fair Green, which is a large field. Here the livestock dealers gather to make their purchases. It is surely interesting for a Canadian to watch the busing and solling at the fair. the buying and selling at these fairs.

The Irish seem to take a particular pride in the raising of hogs. It surely was a treat to the writer to view them at the fairs, they were so exceptionally sclean and, theirly looking that one would think there was something in the sone. "The pig they kept in the parlor, and it was Irsh, too." I would like for state Bereslant I did not see my bours where pigs and chicken were kept in the same house in which the people resided, nor do we believe such a condition of the house in Ireland, get define towns and cities are less than a was a treat to the writer to view them the towns and cities, are but some with thatened roofs. some with thatened roofs.
