Some Pioneer Notes

(Ex-cultor of The Standard)
 It is seventy odd years since this Markdale district was first settled, and the senior pioneers are becoming very scarce. It has been urged, and wisely so, that those who remain, or their children, place on record something of the early experiences, and thus, in a way, link up the past with the present. The only really first settler in this vicinity, who still survives, as far as we know, is Mr. John Steadwell, who is now 103 years old.
 The writer's parents, with wife of a family, left Leeds County in November, 1850, 72 years ago last November, for this part, then called Artemesia, or nicknamed "the heart of misery." The journey was made from Brockville to Toronto by boat, thence by oxen and sled. Some three hundred acres had been "taken up" by father and the sons who were old enough to "draw land." The writer was the youngest of the family, to be got to no ranch. There were a few settlers in one year before our family came, but the County, for many Townships around, was an almost unbroken forest. The district was, however, rapidly settled with a vigorous, industrious, frugal class of people, English, Irish and Scotch, and all decidedly neighbors.
 Our post office was Mono Hills, 50 miles distant, and any neighbor families around who happened to come this direction from Toronto, then called Muddy York, carried what mail matter might be at Mono Hills for settlers of the district. Postage on a letter then was alpenstock. Owen Sound was the nearest point to a first mill, and it was no uncommon occurrence for a farmer to carry his grain to mill on his back, and his four home with him by the same conveyance.
 In 1852 a weekly mail was established between Shelburne and Johnstown, now Chatsworth, 44 miles, and the late James P. Ryan, of Melancton, conveyed this in horseback for many years. There was by this time a "traveller" about every two-and-a-half miles along this Toronto Line; also fully seven miles of cogwheel road in Melancton swamps, so that mail carrying was a slow process.
 What live stock settlers had were wintered largely on browse, being the finer portion of the tree tops. This fodder was plentiful, as the chief work during winter months was clearing up a few more acres the following summer.
 Houses, as well as barns, were built of round logs, and men who were handy with the axe were in demand when a building was being erected to "take up" a corner. A fireplace was almost indispensable in every shack, and they were, as a rule, crudely built, but spacious enough to take in a good-sized log. Stoves were then rare and fuel plentiful, when the stove agent came along in later years, one of his strong points in favor of introducing the stove was that it would save half the fuel. One pioneer met this argument with the peculiar remark that he would take the stove and this save all the wood.
 The farmer's outfit, in the shape of implements, was homespun and inexpensive. For instance, an ox yoke, logging chain, a drag and woodbeam plow, a home-made sleigh, called a lumber, besides a chopping axe and handspikes. Then a sickle or grain trade and home-made wood rake. Oh yes; and a flail for thrashing the grain.
