

Love Gives Itself

THE STORY OF A BLOOD FEUD

By ANNIE S. STAN

"Love gives itself and is not bought."—Longfellow.

CHAPTER XXV.—(Cont'd.)
"I've checked that banker and his wife, Donaldson, but I'm looking into Miss Dempster, one of the world doesn't know how the other half lives. I'm not trying to execute my own mind and heart, but I've been right down there in my time, too, and I ought to have known."
"You've been abroad though for a long time," said Jean, "and you've stopped here for a bit now, and you've spent the most of it on the East Side. I find that work tastes sweet after a while of pay. It's what we were born for, Miss Dempster, and that's the reason we stop work, and the devil steps in and has his innings."
Jean smiled her grave, kind smile which had comforted many.

"We are certainly happier working here," she admitted. "The difficulty is to appropriate it fairly."
"How long have you been out? You say you might have left the Brookline house yesterday?"
"I've been here just about four years," said Jean. "I suppose you mean the house on Park Street, the one where I lived for a while, and that I brought to the direct house. But, of course, he couldn't do that. He had to be some in a lot of other things. I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"How good of you. But then the Scotch don't buy anything to do with a smile, as if they were going to buy a horse. I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

wanderer on whom they had staked so many of their hopes. The success of his brief season at the Manhattan had far surpassed the hopes of Graham Madox. While fully aware of his own powers, which had won him recognition on the other side, Madox was eager to acknowledge that it was Carotta who had conquered New York.

In Judy's estimation he was too ready to acknowledge it. Her sharp eyes discovered when she had the opportunity of seeing them in one another's company often, that it was other than an artist's pride and affection Madox felt for his beautiful colleague.

"That man is in love with you, Carotta," she said, rather shortly, one day. "The simplest way out of the difficulty would be for you to marry him and be done with it."
Sometimes poor Judy was sharp of tongue and bitter of look. But consider her position! A pensioner on Carotta's bounty, compelled to stop in New York until the end of her season, without active occupation or object in life, with little to do but brood; every allowance must be made for her. Even the most perfect friend-such a strain.

Carotta's patience and loving-kindness were infinite; but at length she began to feel some fret of the spirit.
No letters had come from Alberta, and cables had merely elicited the information that nothing had been seen or heard of A. A. Rankine there. He had disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed him; and in her darker moods, Judy inclined to the idea of Rankine's ruthlessness. "And nobody could blame you if you accepted him. Why, it would be just an ideal arrangement!" (To be continued.)

Mr. Fordyce here to be confirmed. "Oh yes, Judy did mention his name. The man who sent her the world doesn't know how the other half lives. I'm not trying to execute my own mind and heart, but I've been right down there in my time, too, and I ought to have known."
"You've been abroad though for a long time," said Jean, "and you've stopped here for a bit now, and you've spent the most of it on the East Side. I find that work tastes sweet after a while of pay. It's what we were born for, Miss Dempster, and that's the reason we stop work, and the devil steps in and has his innings."
Jean smiled her grave, kind smile which had comforted many.

"We are certainly happier working here," she admitted. "The difficulty is to appropriate it fairly."
"How long have you been out? You say you might have left the Brookline house yesterday?"
"I've been here just about four years," said Jean. "I suppose you mean the house on Park Street, the one where I lived for a while, and that I brought to the direct house. But, of course, he couldn't do that. He had to be some in a lot of other things. I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."
"I don't know how long he was out, but he'll be back soon. I hope he'll find that the man I've chosen is a good one."

BRITAIN'S YOUNGEST "BABY"

Cyprus is our latest established Colony, for it received full Colonial status just three months ago.

Yet even though it is our youngest colony, it is actually one of the oldest of civilized lands, its known history beginning more than three thousand years ago.

The Assyrians and the Persians ruled it, and the Phoenicians worked its copper mines and traded in its timber. Cyprus, by the way, is Greek for copper.

Later on, the Greeks captured Cyprus, but the Romans took it from them. The next ruler, strange to say, was an Englishman—King Richard I, who captured Cyprus on his way to the Holy Land in the Third Crusade. From that time the island remained a British possession until Richard sold it to Guy de Lusignan.

For 300 years this man's descendants ruled the land, and Cyprus prospered, and became a country of vast wealth.

Later on, Cyprus was captured by the Turks, and it actually declined. But in 1878 Great Britain occupied it, paying £2,500,000 a year to Turkey. Two years after this the administration was transferred from the Foreign to the Colonial office, and in 1914 Cyprus was formally annexed to the British Empire. It received full Colonial status this May.

Years ago Cyprus was, of course, famous for its forests, but these have sadly diminished, owing to bad usage. Two things still tend to destroy the forests. One is the goat, which is allowed to browse on the twigs and shoots, and the goat-herds, a wild, lawless tribe, have a strange habit, when annoyed by anything of setting them on fire.

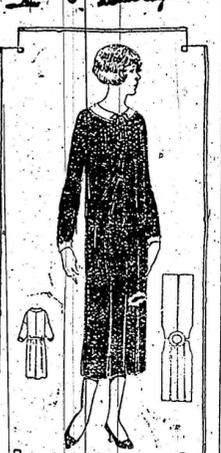

In consequence, the British Government started a special force of forest police and had fire-paths cut through the woods, along which the police could patrol.

The Cypriotes themselves are remarkably primitive in many ways. They still plough with oxen, and carry their goods on camels and donkeys.

Cyprus silk is very fine indeed, and to encourage its manufacture, Queen Mary, in 1923, ordered Cyprus cocoons to be used in the manufacture of silk for the decorations of Buckingham Palace.

With its fine climate, Cyprus produces all manner of fruits in profusion. Yet there is no grass in Cyprus, so barley is grown as fodder for the cattle instead.

CLIPSE FASHIONS

PLAITS REGISTER IMPORT-ANTLY.

Box and skirt plaits form a very pleasant deviation from the straight-line frocks. They are given a piece on the bodice, pictured above, and start at the chair and reach to the hemline, being held in place by stitching over the hips, and released to give fullness to the skirt front. The plaits are made of the same material as the skirt, and are finished with a round collar, which is a universal favorite. No. 1137 is in sizes 16, 18 and 20 years. Size 18 requires 3 1/2 yards of 36-inch or 40-inch material. Price 20 cents.

Many styles of smart apparel may be found in our new Fashion Book. Our designers originate their patterns in the heart of the style centres, and their creations are those of tested popularity, brought within the grasp of the average woman. Price of the book 10 cents. Each copy includes one coupon good for five cents in the purchase of any pattern.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you prefer; wrap it carefully for each number, and address your order to Pattern Dept., Wilson Publishing Co., 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto. Patterns sent by return mail.

Curing Sick Goldfish.

Goldfish are not as hardy as is generally supposed, and many fine specimens are lost because of ignorance on the owner's part. When these fish are kept in aquariums they are liable to suffer from a curious disease known as fungus growth. This takes the form of a spreading white growth. As the growth increases the fish becomes listless and distressed to swim. It will certainly die unless curative measures are taken as soon as the white coating is noticed.

Give the fish a salt bath—this is one of the best ways for countering fungus growth. Prepare a rather strong solution of common salt and water, allowing a heaped tablespoon of salt to each pint of water. When the salt has all dissolved, put the mixture into a bowl.

Now catch the fish, using a net if he evades your hand. Holding the "patient" very gently, put it in the bowl of salt water and leave it there for about three minutes. Then put it into a bowl of fresh water, and make this change several times—allowing from two to three minutes in each bowl.

When the fish is relapsed in the aquarium it will immediately show improvement, more life and activity, and will continue to gain the white coat disappearing, meantime. If any of the growth remains stubbornly, or threatens to reappear, it has gone a second bath should be given in the same way. The treatment should not be repeated too frequently, however, as it then becomes injurious to the goldfish.

To be ignorant of what happened in the world before you were born is to be all year's life a child.

Young Tender Leaves

and tips shown in

"SALADA"

GREEN TEA

are sealed in air-tight aluminum foil. Their fresh flavor is finer than any Japan or Gunpowder. Try SALADA.

Surnames and Their Origin

MORLEY. Racial Origin—English. Variations—Marley, Marley, Merley, Merle, Merle, Merley, Merley, Merley. Racial Origin—Irish. Source—A given name. A few of the variations in this name of family names would be regarded as Irish. Yet they are persons bearing these names to-day were to spell them true Gaelic fashion, it would be Mcarraig. The pronunciation wouldn't be materially different from the Gaelic name which you hear in the speech of the man and the Highlander, and variety a "brogue" or a "burr." This pronunciation is a little closer to the Gaelic name than Marley, the latter of the two Anglicized names is the more common spelling. This clan took its name about A.D. from a chieftain named Loch. The meaning of this name is "quickwarrior." The form Varley, not often met in this country, is a variation of the Gaelic name in certain instances the Gaelic name "in" the sound of "v." The letter though not the sound, is also the Irish language.

Faith.

This much I know, God does not wrong us here. Though oft His judgments seem severe, And reason falters, neath the load, Some day we'll learn 'twas better.

How to Order Patterns.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you prefer; wrap it carefully for each number, and address your order to Pattern Dept., Wilson Publishing Co., 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto. Patterns sent by return mail.

Ways and Means.

Mr. Splash—"Have we paid for our piano now?" Mrs. Splash—"Yes, dear. And we only have one installment left on the bill."

What a Cynic!

Third Business Man—"I'd like to go with you, but I'm afraid I can't. I'm a bit of a cynic."

Engagement.

She (as train took at grade crossing)—"George, you're right ahead. Don't let that brute bully you."

Don't Worry.

Doctors have been gathering statistics on nervous diseases, and their tendency to shorten life, and have issued a remarkable bulletin regarding worrying.

Borrowing Again.

It was the day of the school concert, and the audience consisted mainly of mothers, proud or envious, according to the parts that their children were playing.

Wigley's

Wigley's is a brand of chewing gum that is known for its quality and flavor. It is made from natural ingredients and is a popular choice for many people.

A FARM WHICH WALKED DOWN MAIN STREET

And visitors of the Canadian Pacific Railway are invited to see the most unique feature of the prairie. It is a complete model of a farm and village, the exact reproduction of a typical prairie farm and village, and all the paraphernalia customarily associated with modern farm life. The model is prepared and constructed by the Department of Natural Resources of the Canadian Pacific R.R.