The Bell With the Voice of a Woman

NOT far from the Temple of Totai-ji, at Nara, Japan, there is a gigantic bell which weighs about forty-eight tons. It is 137 feet high, 10 inches thick at the top, and 27 feet in circumference, and the volume of its tones is enormous and awe-inspiring.

About this famous bell there is a fantastic tale carried on the lips of staid, old, Japanese children through the picturesque, intriguing streets, on which they play. Many hundreds of years ago, a stern and powerful Emperor ruled Japan with a strong hand.

Hop. "Imbecile!" thundered the Emperor. "May your foul carcass be devoured by demons. They should inflict upon the ears of your monarch this desecration. Dost call that a bell? An unwieldy lump of metal! One day he decided he would have a new bronze bell, one which would ring louder and issue more tones than any other bell in his empire."

So he went for Hop Si Weng, the official bell-maker, an aged and honorable servant of the Crown for many years, a man who had served three Emperors. And Hop Si Weng was told to make a bell that would please the Emperor. An artistic bell, a beautiful bell, a bell with a human voice.

Hop had a beautiful daughter. She was as good as she was beautiful—indeed, a rarity. To her, Hop sobbed out the story of his failure and the displeasure of the Emperor. She listened sympathetically and nodded slowly and told Hop to start work on the bell.

Each is the story told about the bell that set in from the Temple of Totai-ji. But then the story is told of other beautiful
