

For the Boys and Girls

THE ELEPHANT COOKIE

Buster locked down the show-boated path to the gate and sawed off the yard. An extra hard kick at his sled sent the thing scurrying away from the world. And it was shaped like an elephant.

Buster was tired of everything—the snow, the sled, but most of all, he was tired of himself.

Now that he didn't stop at the gateway, but went across the steps of a snowy, brown sled, where a young boy lay on the porch. Buster started on a run after it. Then he stopped right at the gate. The five children had come up on the boardwalk and planned to go one at a time for a footbal rush.

"I'll be first," said the oldest boy. "I'll be last," said the youngest. "I'll be second," said the middle boy.
