AN EASTER RESCUE

"Well, Christmas is Christmas and Thanksgiving is Thanksgiving! But if there is one fostive season in the year tent makes my blood tingle and rouses all the good in me, it is Haster. The very air seems full of new life and hope—and purpose—and that sort of thing."

Pen Nobel turned her bright face on a girl at her side, looking as if it took very little, indeed, to make her years time, and guicken her buoyant life. Her have her buoyant life. Her have her how neves had caucht, while, he was speaking, a peculiar red time, as if a tiny flame had crept into each, her clear, young, treit body was pitfully light—all the way back along Cedar avenue and an active with your eyes of life; and for her into an excess of delight. The body are: Pen!" answered her for six with your eyes of life; and for her is yery tame, if ever a season was:

We have the same eards, her is yery tame, if ever a season was:

We have the same eards, her is yery tame, if ever a season was:

We have the same eards, her is yery tame, if ever a season was:

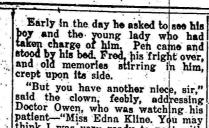

We have the same eards, her is yery tame, if ever a season was:

We have the same eards, her.

"Hand" interrupted. Pen, eagerly, young her young her to offering, the same freak along the great hold of a new freak?

Who knows."

The speaker abruptly broke offi. Her eyes stared ahear of her, glowing yet worked at if her spirit had got hito them, and she was trying to restrain the season was trying

"But you have another niece, sir," said the clown, feebly, addressing Doctor Owen, who was watching his patient—"Miss Edna Kline. You may think I was very ready to part with my son, but I knew that, putting everything else aside, he would live in the house with his own cousin. Have you never heard that Captain Kline, Edna's father, had a young sister who married a concert singer, and was lost sight of by her brother?"

The doctor nodded.

"She is dead," went on the clown, mournfully. "She died the day Fred side ways as only loving hearts can mournfully. "She died the day Fred side ways as only loving hearts can s
