BEGIN HERE TO-DAY.

To escape hanging on the charge of sedition Andre-Louis Moreau fled from his native town of Gavrilles and hides his identity as a member of a band of strolling players in which he makes a great success in the character of Scaramouche.

With the story. CHAPTER IX. "You are wrong," said Clémence, "that is the explanation which I have given you."

He had made his own, but he had made it with a purpose. He had made it to lead her to the stage.

That was the evening's first shock. It came after the second act, when the green-room door opened and the far end with Clémence, over whom he was leaning from his fine height, his eyes intent upon her face, M. de La Tour d'Azyr.

They crossed the square and entered the cafe. "I suppose you haven't heard of the royal order for the convocation of the States General, or the terms of them—that we are to have what we demanded, what you demanded for us here in Nantes? You haven't heard of the fresh uproar in Rennes, last month. The order was that the three Estates should sit together at the States General but the nobles took up arms, headed by your old friend, M. de La Tour d'Azyr, and they were for slaying us—the members of the Third Estate—into ribbons so as to put an end to our insolence." He laughed delicately.

"But you showed them that we, too, could take up arms. We fought them a pitched battle in the streets, and no power there that they were glad to take shelter in the Cordeliers' convent."

"It is odd," said Andre-Louis, "that I should never perceive that Nantes is being politically active."

That night at the theatre he had a mischievous impulse to test what Le Chapelier had told him of the state of public feeling in the city. They were playing "The Horrible Captain," in the last act of which the cowardice of the bullying brigand Rhodome is revealed by Scaramouche.

After the laughter which the exposure of the roaring captain invariably produced, it remained for Scaramouche contemptuously to dismiss him in a phrase that varied nightly. This time he chose to give his phrase a political complexion.

"I was born in Stoutville and have lived here all my life attending the Stoutville Public and Continuation Schools. Last year I took the High School entrance examinations, and succeeded in passing them with honors, and this year, so far, I believe, I have led my classes. Composition has been about my best subject and I believe it is the one subject I really like for I really enjoy writing a composition on an interesting subject though I have by no means any great talent or ability for it.

I am very fond of reading books and have read a great many of them of many different classes and it is very hard indeed to leave my books and attend my school duties. But though I enjoy reading books I am by no means the proverbial 'book-worm' because sports of all kinds form an important part in my life. In the winter I spend my leisure around the rink on skates, in the exhilarating air which brings the breeze to your cheeks, to me, it is perhaps it is a joy, a knowledge tramp on the pond. Just now we are actively engaged in basketball at school and enjoy it greatly, especially as we seem to have the winning team, but we are trying to win to be good losers, as well as good winners for we cannot always win. There is an endless list of water sports and land sports too numerous to mention. I am a member of the United Church of Canada I love and consequently engaged in the activities of the societies connected with it.

"The breaking of a levee at Dierport, ten miles north of Vicksburg, transformed the city into a peninsula, with all train service discontinued except on the lines from New Orleans. The Red Cross had not entirely finished rescuing the inhabitants of Greenville and the surrounding country after the break at Stopp's Landing, when reports started pouring in on us from Louisiana. The captain of one of the boats and the water broke through the levee with such a terrific roar, and with such force that it dug a hole 1000 feet and rushed across the land, uprooting trees and everything in its path."

"It was ludicrous of him, and he was prepared for anything—a laugh, applause, indignation, or all together. But he was not prepared for what came. And it came so suddenly and spontaneously from the groundlings and the body of those in the amphitheatre that he was almost scared by it as a boy may be scared who has held a match to a gun-screed hayrick. It was a hurricane of furious applause. Men leapt to their feet, sprang up on to the benches, waving their hats in the air, deafening him with the terrific uproar of their acclamations. And it rolled on and on, nor ceased until the curtain fell.

TRAGEDY OF FLOOD TOLD IN LETTER

Correspondent of Miss Mary Ancona Describes Suffering That Drove Victims Insane.

A man and his wife stood two days and nights with their six children in their marooned Mississippi Valley home. Their supply of food was eaten the first day.

Exhausted, the parents were unable to hold their children and the two smallest drowned when the water rose still higher the third morning. Crazed, the man spent all that day trying to drown his wife and the surviving children.

When the family was rescued that night by a Red Cross boat the mother also had lost her reason. The parents now are convalescing in Camp Haystack. "Such is the tragic story of the flood in a letter from Mrs. C. S. Waggaman, a Red Cross worker, to the Red Cross office at Vicksburg.

Aged Negro Drowned. She also told of an aged Negro who ran two miles before he was overtaken and drowned by the water pouring through the crevasse at Stopp's Landing.

"We understand here," Mrs. Bert writes, "that if the country contributed the fifteen millions needed, that the Red Cross will not only get all these figures right but give them also the necessities of life and perhaps enough to plant a crop and start at once to use in place of the Red Cross. I can not understand to this day how they were able to handle his situation so efficiently and so rapidly, and to bring food and other supplies in such a short time. There are thousands of people in Mississippi who owe a debt of gratitude which they can never repay to the Red Cross workers here."

The spirit of cooperation between them and the people of Vicksburg has been most remarkable. The Red Cross workers, but also to the hospitable character of the Vicksburg people.

The Chief Tragedy. "The chief tragedy of the flood is the separation of families. The father had to pack up and with and-family down on the boat. Several days later he follows, and is much alarmed at not finding them at once. Our registration seeks to prevent such occurrences, but even so, it seems probable that some of these people may never get together again."

"Already Vicksburg has doubled its population, and five of his regiments and five miles from town, have been organized like army contingents for the 2,000 refugees. The medical supervision has been so excellent that there has been only one case of typhoid and two of smallpox. Every one is vaccinated and given typhoid injections, and no townspeople are permitted to visit the camps nor refugees to leave them."

Detroit to Legalize Bridging Its Streets. Detroit—The Detroit City Council after unanimously passing an ordinance permitting the American Transit Company, engineering the $21,000,000 International Bridge across the Detroit River between Detroit and Windsor, to cross certain West End streets, has decided upon June 28 as the date for a special election at which the ordinance will be submitted to the voters. A majority vote will be sufficient for approval.

This election has been called at the request of the bridge company and its cost, amounting to about $45,000, will be paid by the company. Preliminary construction work on the bridge is being done on private property.

FOURTH PRIZE ESSAY

The Confederation of Canada.

"The Confederation of Canada."

Through more than three centuries of conflict and doubt, the history of Canada has gradually unfolded its path until today we have a nation. The story of the early pioneers, in what they called the "New World," the Catholic missionaries, the "Pilgrims," the manly loyalty to freedom and independence; the love of liberty of the United Empire Loyalists; these and many other influences have gone to make up the Canadian character. The men who drew together all these scattered threads into a united whole, and held it true to British loyalty, and retained an independence of their own—known as Confederation history are the Fathers of Confederation, a band of men drawn together by a great idea. George Brown, Sir George Cartier, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Charles Tupper and others all exercised their influence and used their persuasive powers, seeing the need of unity and working for a great objective, Confederation. All did their best but the man who carried the greater part of the burden and who did more than all to hold the nation together after it was united was Sir John A. Macdonald. They won for Canada Confederation, freedom, independence, unity and still retained loyal to the Motherland; and Confederation, the B.N.A. Act has made Canada a nation, a glorious home for children proud to call themselves Canadians.

The Quebec Act and Constitutional Act had given new forms of government but were not entirely satisfactory. The Lord Durham was sent and recommended responsible government and union and was aided by Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Sir Charles Tupper and Lord Dufferin. As a result the two provinces were united and responsible government was introduced.

There had been many suggestions of union in the last century. The first suggestion was in 1777, the independent legislators in 1791, John B. Ross in 1822, Sir John A. Macdonald in 1841, and Sir John A. Macdonald in 1854. By 1864 there had been three separate two provinces and two parties in Canada were at a dead end. It was thought that if all British North America were united, new members would come in from the Maritime Provinces and give one party the majority. About this time, although for years they had been given every opportunity to be united by Confederation and heard the call of Canada, Macdonald and Brown united in their views. Great Britain favored union and the abolition of her Colonial Laws forced Canada to seek for new trade. In 1851 the Hepburn treaty gave free trade with the United States but it was soon abolished. So she thought that if she could not trade north and south, why not east and west? To do this there must be a railway to the Maritime Provinces.

LORD BALFOUR IS LAZY. "Squatter" Gets Important Post. Sydney, N.S.W. The selection of Maj. Gen. Sir George Ryrie to succeed Sir Joseph Cook as High Commissioner in Australia, since there had been some competition, and highly placed politicians for the post. The gallant general himself expressed surprise when the Prime Minister, Stanley Bruce, offered him the post, exclaiming: "Has everyone else refused it?" General Ryrie will be the first native Australian to hold this high office in London. He comes of a family of squatters—sheep-raisers on a large scale, and his appointment is highly popular among the graziers of New South Wales.

and for this there must be some kind of union. Also, during the American Civil War, fear of a United States invasion made Canada see that for strength she must have unity.

The French had feared that by coming not one of two provinces but one of four of the "they would be swamped, but that is precisely what the eyes of the Confederation saw. The Maritime Provinces were supporting union of British and Canadian delegates in the Confederation conference where Upper and Lower Canada sent representatives to check the former union. They then accepted the Quebec Act and they agreed to the Union which in 1867 was presented to the Canadian Parliament.

Upper Canada's second time, but Lower Canada's first time, was the Confederation Act. The Confederation Act was passed on March 29, 1867, and on April 1, 1867, Canada became a nation.

The terms of the Act which made Canada a free Dominion are: (1) Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were united to form one Dominion under the name of Canada.

(2) Upper and Lower Canada were to form two separate provinces, the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec.

(3) The form was to be represented by a Governor General appointed by the King.

(4) There was to be a Parliament of thirteen members, which had power to make laws for the Dominion.

(5) The British Parliament had power to make laws for the Dominion, but the British Parliament was to have no power to make laws for the Dominion.

(6) The British Parliament was to have no power to make laws for the Dominion.
