DELICIOUS SECRETS I LEARNED Wilson Publishing Company FROM FARM COOKS IN FRANCE

BY MARIE CECILE CHOMEL.

I used to use my very best butter for the table and the poorest in the cooking. Now I do the other way Ten years ago I'd have considered the idea too absurd for words. Now I pay the top price for butter to cook with and pay it cheerfully. I get my meney's worth not only in better food but also in easier cooking methods. It shortens the time previously devoted to kitchen labors about

More revolutionary still, cream on my table is no longer a controlling food principle. To be sure, I still use cream and butter but I cook them in the food.

This trick I learned in the country homes of France-but, mostly in one kitchen, in particular, where Madelaine reigned over the big stove and the twelve-foot table set squarely in the centre, affording wonderful space for all her preparations.

The first day, when Madelaine dipped liberally into the big crock of butter fresh from the butter and cheese room, I asked about "cooking butter." Madeline had never heard of such a thing. When I explained, her hands went into the air.

"Surely it is that you jest," she slipped the dish into the oven to turn

Pads for Dresser Drawers

A pretty dress of either silk or cotton which is no longer desired for wear makes excellent pads for the dresser drawers. Rip or cut the dress apart at pieces to fit the drawers, allowing a little extra for the padding to take up. Two thicknesses of sheet cotton will be right for this padding; sprinkle between the two any favorite suitchet powder, place the two pieces of the cover together rendy for sewing-the under side may be of the same or another material—pin in place, sew around, turn, tack here and there and the pad is done. Now fit it in the bottom of the drawer and with six thumb tacks secure it in place. A drawer thus fitted up for one's clothing is especially pleasing. There is no objection, of course, to using other material than that here suggested.

Pumpkins for Dairy Cows

Is the old practice of feeding pumpkins to dairy cows going out? I have been on quite a few farms recently, and on only one farm did I find any pazin kins or squashes. It used to be common practice on our farm, and on neighboring farms as well, to grow pumpking for pigs and cows every year.

Too bad the practice is dying out in some sections. Pumpkins are palatable, cows like them, and they have approximately the same feeding value as beets, roots and apples. Pumpkins are of greatest value when fed at the rate of 80 to 60 pounds a day in addition to a good grain and hay ration. The seeds, instead of being poisonous or deleterious most valuable part of the pump
