Helpful Hints

To Clean White Furs

Hot corn meal well rubbed in and shaken out will clean children's white furs nicely if they are not too much soiled. The same treatment will help slightly soiled light felt hats. Sometimes flour is used, the article being covered with it, after rubbing with it, rolled up and laid away for a day or two.

Getting Rid of Burs in Fall

If you examine the burdocks closely, that you have kept cut down all summer, you will likely find a few burs maturing down close to the root, filled with seed that will start new plants next year. Cut them off and burn them before the winter winds and snow bater them off on to the ground. Then you will have no more trouble in that spot. Burdocks are biennial. That is: the plant grows one year, matures the next, then is dead—unless it is propagated by its seed. If one remembers this, one will not find it hard to get rid of this pest. The perennial weeds, that grow from the root year after year, are much more difficult.

EXECUTORS' SALE

The Executors of the Estate of the late Robert Graham will offer by Public Auction, at the place of residence of the said deceased, Lot 23, 12th Concession, Artemesia Township, on the 12th day of October, 1928, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, a quantity of chattels, including, 1 cow, 2 pigs, weighing scales, fanning mill and various other articles. The sale to commence sharp at 2 o'clock. The terms of sale are cash. For further particulars apply to Lucas & Henry, Solicitors of Markdale, or to J. A. Clark, auctioneer.

Fixing Flowers for Winter

Don't forget to hill up the hybrid perpetual roses with soil, for about 8 inches, before winter sets in. Cut the climbing roses from their supports, lay them flat and cover with soil. If this is impossible bind them about with straw and old sacking. Nearly all perennials are the better of a covering of loose strawy manure, but do not make it deep enough to smother the roots. Straw and leaves make excellent covering if one has brush or open slatted boxes to hold them down so the wind will not blow them away.
