"Combines" in the West

Manitoba Free Press: After two or three years of constant exportation, what seems like a first-class revolution in western harvesting methods appears to be taking place this year. This is the greatly increased use of "combines" in the grain fields of the prairie provinces. In Saskatchewan alone, it is estimated that 5,000 of these machines will be used this season, compared with less than six hundred in the 1927 crop year. Everywhere implement dealers report that their trade is not in making sales but in supplying orders already received. Experiments in the use of the combine in Western Canada began in 1922, which means that the advantages claimed for them cannot yet be considered as fully proved. Enough data, however, appears to have been collected to suggest that, under certain conditions, which are not extremely difficult to obtain, very great economies in harvesting costs can be achieved.

Britain and the U. S. A.

Leo Mayer in the National Review: "I had 'Great Britain' been the League of Nations, nothing could have kept the United States out of it. We say this without feeling any resentment of America's repudiation of the Covenant—however much we may resent the means employed because, different as are Anglo-American relations, they would be infinitely worse if the United States belonged to the League, and every meeting of that body and every international problem on its agenda could be made an Anglo-American issue by Anglophone journals pandering to the Irish-American and the German-American gallery, and Washington politicians seeking opportunities of courtship popularity by some anti-British demonstration."

Tourists

Sherbrooke Tribune (Lab.): Not so long ago, when the Province of Quebec was the only province in Canada to permit the sale of liquor, multitudes of tourists took pleasure in saying that it was for the sake of getting a drink that Americans used to flock into Quebec. What are these slanders worth today when Ontario and the other provinces, formerly prohibitionist, now allow the sale of alcoholic liquor?

Patriotism and Peace

Sir Herbert Sandfield in the Contemporary Review: "Nationalism and internationalism, the fatherland and the world, patriotism and peace—these are not antagonistic; they are complementary; they are complementary to one another. The true word is said long ago by Seneca, 'Every man has his own two communities—the Commonwealth and his native city.' To harmonize the claims of the two is our daily task."

Ontario Corn Causes Comment

When one reads from an authoritative source of cornstalks that grow to a height of fifteen feet, one is almost ready to believe that the necessary tale of "Jack and the Beanstalk" ought to be a bit inflated in order to bring it up to date. A farmer in Ontario said to have displayed stalks of this height when he learned that a New York grower was modestly expressing some pride over his own growth of twelve feet and six inches, an altitude for corn that might even arouse a little feeling among such well-known climbers as the members of the peapole family.

An Angler's Bad Dream

When I was a boy, I used to dream of being an angler. I would dream of sitting on a boat, fishing in a lake, and catching a big fish. I would dream of the sun shining on the water, and the birds flying in the sky. I would dream of the gentle breeze blowing on my face, and the soft sound of the water lapping against the boat.
