Early Alaskan Mounted "Houses" Will Be Dug Up

University of Pennsylvania Museum Organizing Expedition to Point
Barrow

Philadelphia.—Further light upon the early history and culture of the Eskimos is sought by the University of Pennsylvania Museum, which has arranged to excavate some unusual mounds of Eskimos origin at Point Barrow, Alaska, at the northernmost tip of the North American mainland, according to an announcement by museum authorities here.

Work on the excavations will be started as soon as weather conditions permit, probably in June, and will be carried on by Eskimos under the direction of Alfred H. Hopson, an Alaskan who has been selected for the work.

According to R. J. Alden Mason, curator of the American section of the museum, the first group of mounds to be excavated was found in 1918 when W. B. Van Valin, a research worker in anthropology, discovered mounds that contained structures resembling houses, some being 18 by 45 feet, built of driftwood with ceiling of logs.

A thick covering of sod has been placed over the roofs and the walls and the skylights, which had been cut into each roof, had been covered with seal or walrus skins. Skeletal remains of many persons were found, with some of which were found implements and possessions of daily life, including wooden drinking cups, barrels containing small pieces of seal, flipper and blubber and three-pointed fish spears.

Later last year, much of the material that had been brought here was transferred from the Museum to the Winter Institute of Anatomy at the university and examined by Dr. Alexander of the National Museum at Washington.

Further examination by archaeologists from the museum, Dr. Mason said, "also revealed the objects to be typical of a phase of ancient Eskimo culture scientifically called the 'Thule culture,' which had been very well studied in the central Arctic regions, but not so well in Alaska."

Following these revelations, which form most important contributions to Arctic archaeology, Dr. Irilleka made inquiries which disclosed that there remain a number of similar mounds near Point Barrow, but that the Eskimos, inspired by the knowledge that white men had become interested in the mounds, had begun to destroy them, and he was able to stop them, and very recently remarked when I saw him, when he left the room before going to play, 'I'll see you again.'

"With the cooperation of Dr. Hrdlicka, the University Museum then made arrangements to excavate mounds which are still undisturbed and to bring the finds to the museum where they will be available for further study.

"The United States Coast Guard Service and the Bureau of Education both of which have vessels available in Alaskan waters, have agreed to help the museum transport materials."

The Scottish Invasion

C. E. Lawrence, in John C. London's Weekly: Not only do they (the Scots) bring with them the accent of their fathers, the congenital thriftiness of their mothers, the legendary and domestic atmosphere of their home village or hillside, but also they bear southwards a version of history which in a very brief while we are ready to accept as ancient. By merely talking of it they have impressed us with the consciousness that Bannockburn was the only real battle fought between the English and the Scottish, and that a couple of thousand men may be thrown out of work. But it is an ill wind that blows no one any good. Le Soleil of Quebec sees in the situation evidence of the necessity of giving that part the importance that is due to it by increasing its harbour facilities. It points, too, to the inadequacy of the accommodation provided at Montreal. Elsewhere the present conditions are used as an argument for the prompt development of our canal system. Congestion is not expected in the elevators at the head of the lakes for a couple of weeks. Then it will doubtless be discovered that the situation is due to the inadequacy of harbour facilities at Vancouver and Victoria.

To Sleep
What kindlier friend in all the world have we—
Escort for man between the day
and day?
Curtailed by night, anesthetized by shee,
We are restored, and sent upon our way.
A boon thou art that never can be bought,
Nor may proud Wealth thy use
monopolize;
Thou tallest like down upon our

And knowest the place where tired Labour lies.
If arrows of the day should wound
us sore,
Or Guilt or Failure track us to our

They harm heats; the humiliating score Thou'lt wipst clean away; and sometimes when Death from our circle a love one may

We get him back from thee... until we're wake.

The Grain Congestion

Toronto Telegram (Ind. Cons.): The drop in wheat market has congested the elevators at Montreal and Port Colborne. A hundred vessels are lying at the wharves to unload.

Hints are read of a possible reduced purchasing power in the West, and that a couple of thousand men may be thrown out of work. But it is an ill wind that blows no one any good.

Trade With Britain

Toronto Globe (Ind.): Under the present circumstances Canada is purchasing from the United States hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of bonds in excess of total Canadian debts to the Republic. At the same time the exact reverse is true in the case of trade with the Motherland.

We sell to Britain far more than we buy from her. "Buy from those who buy from you" is a good slogan at any time. It will serve even more applicable and urgent in the present case if the United States reduces to any appreciable extent her purchases from this Dominion.

An Irishman's Venice

The Pride of the West she was, the Jewel of the East, Constantinople was her courtly, Greece, Egypt, Abyssinia, Bulgaria and Muscovy, her far-off fields... Sailors? You'd think those fellows had invented the sea! And as for riches and treasures, oh!

the wonder of the world she was! Tribute she had from everywhere; the four great horses of Saint Mark they came from Constantinople. The two great marble columns facing the Platina, sure, they came from Acre...

The processions of the tradesmen were like a king's in procession,

and they marched in state on the election of a doge. Each in their separate order they'd come, the master smiths first, as is right; with everyone garlanded like a conqueror, with their banners and their buglers; . . . the cloth-of-gold weavers, with golden crowds set with pearls; the shoe-makers set with silk, while the silk-workers were in fustian; the cheese dealers and pork butchers in scarlet and purple; the fishmongers, with elegant specimens of their art; the comb-makers, with little birds in cages; the barber-surgeons on horseback, very dignified, very learned, and with that you'd think there'd be an end of them, but cast your eye back on that procession and you'd find guilds as far as your sight would reach.

Let you be going down the markets, and what would you see for sale? Boots, clothes, bread? No, they were out of sight; but scattered on the booths, tho' like of girls of bread on a fair-day, you'd find cloves and nutmegs, mice and ebony from Moulmein, hats that had come by way of Alexandria and the Syrian ports; sandalwood from Timor, in Asia; camphor from Borneo; Sumatra and Java sent benzoin to her markets. Codfish-China sent bitter aloes wood. From China and Japan and from Siam came gun-powders, silks, chessmen, and curiosities for the parlor. Rubies from Peru; fine cloths from Coromandel and finer still from Bengal. They got spikenard from Nepal and Bhutan. . . . You'd see pearls and sapphires, topaz and cinnamon from Ceylon; lac and agar from India; brocades and coral from Cambay; hammered vessels and inlaid weapons and embroidered shawls from Cashmere. As for spices, never would your nostrils meet such an odor; betel from Scinde, musk from Tibet; saffron from Persia; safflower and cumin from Zanzibar; ivory, too. And from Zelia, Barbara and Shehri came balsam and frankincense.

And that was Venice, and Marco Polo, a young man. And now it's only a town like any other town but for its churches and canals. — From "Messer Marco Polo," by Donn Byrne.
