A War Child Works For Peace

What the League of Red Cross Societies Does in Peace Time and for Peace

Anno Anderson Perry

At the other day the League of Red Cross Societies of 60 countries passed its tenth birthday. With its existence of this useful international body, which is today recognized as an integral part of the world's social organization, may be said to have come to an end and its vigorous adult life to have begun. Born as an aftermath of the Great War, the League typifies a new world order which is being created by the League of Nations and the League of Red Cross Societies is doing its bit in building for a firm foundation. For the League of Nations is creating a new world order and setting precedents which will have a definite bearing on international relations. Co-operation, conference and experience of one race with another in daily dealings in this new world order is the main aim of the League of Nations. It is a trail leading to a new world order. It is a trail leading to a new world order. It is a trail leading to a new world order.

Williams is leading a botanical expedition to the Amazon for the Field Museum of Natural History. Accompanied only by several Indian guides, Williams made a trip by foot and canoe 225 miles into the interior of the Amazon region to collect exotic medicinal plants and material. Bush Indians were used frequently to cut a trail through the thick forest of tropical jungle, and often it was necessary to wade for miles knee-deep in mud and water.

His Appreciation

A lot of hurried and excited people crowded round an in a railway station and the young lady in charge was doing her best to answer them. Each person thought he should be attended to first, but although they were rude, uncompassionate and sarcastic, the young lady was not only prompt and gracious in her replies, but kept pleasant smiles through it all. When the crowd was finally satisfied an elderly man who had been sitting looking on stepped up to her and remarked: "If I were thirty years younger and unmarried you wouldn't have to sit in that chair much longer."

The Labor Government

Billings Weekly Seaman (Cont.) Everything regards on the attentiveness of Mr. MacDonald as to how long he will hold the reins. Another election this summer is not desired, but neither Liberal nor Unionist can overlook the fact that the voice of the country is anti-Socialist, and that they have become the curators of the people's rights. If the Socialists manage to avoid an immediate fall the country will find that progress is possible only along the well-beaten paths, and those voters who have equated "with national will" realize the futility of all.
