Infantile Paralysis

The control and prevention of authorities. The policy of the Department of Health of Ontario has been for some years now to offer a variety of services to assist local health authorities in their fight against communicable diseases in their respective communities, and the public are well informed in regard to the products which the Department distributes free of charge for the prevention of certain communicable diseases. The people of Ontario are also very appreciative of the fact that the Department extends this humanitarian service to include treatments for persons suffering from specific diseases —insulin for diabetes, serum for infantile paralysis, antitoxin for scarlet fever and diphtheria, etc.

The most striking item, however, is the provision, without cost, of convalescent serum for the treatment of infantile paralysis, which is the most recent addition to the list of free products distributed by the Department. This was undertaken during the present year when an invasion of infantile paralysis within the boundaries of Ontario seemed at least a possibility if not a probability.

It is scientific knowledge that the blood serum of a recovered case of Infantile Paralysis has a curative effect if injected into an acute case in the early stage. Fully 200 cases cases have been treated with blood serum obtained and prepared by this Department during the current year. Without this treatment either paralyzed or would have suffered death. The complete cures in the treated cases this year show a successful result of over ninety-five per cent., which means that nearly 200 citizens of this Province will be alive and well instead of being either dead or paralyzed, and the cost in connection with this work has been in the neighborhood of fifteen hundred dollars.

Canada's Oldest Sailor

"I think I've carried a spell in drydock" says Boatswain H. McEwen, aged 73, who sailed from Vancouver for the Orient on his last voyage before retirement, on board the Empress of Russia, recently. He has been at sea 52 years and is the oldest sailor in the employ of Canadian Pacific Steamships Ltd. As a lad of 11 he shipped out of London in a sailing vessel, served in the United States Navy and entered the service of the Canadian Pacific in 1893 where he remained until his retirement. "I don't regret my days at sea", he said, "It was a hard business to learn in the old days but conditions to-day are as good as most trades ashore."

Night Peace

Even as the lily
All night awake,
Upon the still waters
Of the dark lake,
Moves not nor stirs,
Even so she,
So white, so weary,
Sleeps—as the lily

All night asleep
In the still waters
Looking down deep,
Moves not nor stirs

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

The man who would never walk again.

Who could imagine a more poignant story than this? A champion athlete—bedridden, then he took Kruschen. Told that he could never walk again . . . . And

"My doctor told my landlady that I could never walk again. I had rheumatism set in about Christmas-time, and was confined to bed for two months.

"I am nearly sixty years of age. After taking six bottles I am starting to work next week. Up till two years ago I had been a Champion Racing Cyclist. I have won a prize every time I have ridden. Being an athlete, but a poor scholar, it would take me a week to write the facts about Kruschen Salts."—W. H. B.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at drug and department stores in Canada at 75c. a bottle. A bottle contains enough to last for 4 or 5 months—good health for half-a-cent a day.

Politicians console themselves with the belief that they are statesmen not yet arrived.

Billy's daddy took him to the railroad to see the circus unload. After seeing the elephants, camels and other animals unloaded from the cars, his daddy said: "Well, Billy, I guess we have seen it all. Now shall we go home?" To which Billy replied: "No, daddy, let's stay a while longer and see them unload the clowns."

WAGING WAR ON INSECTS

The Entomological Branch of the Department of Agriculture is protective in every sense of the word, and the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, which the branch administers, is one of Canada's most important legislative measures, based as it is on the fact that the best way to control dangerous insect pests and plant diseases is to prevent their introduction.

SUNSPOTS VARY IN NUMBER

Sunspots vary in numbers in a period of average length of eleven and a half years. The weather is found to vary along with these changes in the sun, in some localities quite definitely. As a result living conditions vary with consequent effects on birds, animals, trees, grain growth, and economic conditions.

IS YOUR APPETITE POOR?

PERHAPS by dieting or other means, you have been treating the symptoms, rather than the cause. Loss of appetite, heartburn, sour stomach, are symptoms that the blood is impure. This explains the successful use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in all such cases. Here is a typical example:—

"I began to feel easily tired," writes Miss Margaret White, of Parry Sound, "and when I sat down to a meal I felt I did not want to eat. A doctor told me I was anaemic but I made little progress with his medicine. When I started taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I soon noticed that my appetite was improving, that the headaches came less frequently and that I was not so easily tired. Now my weight has increased, my cheeks are rosy and every ache and pain has vanished."

Marshy Ground Lists Pisa's Tower

Increase of Water Around Foundation Causes Lean of Structure to Increase

Rome.—Pisans once again are alarmed over the stability of their tower. The anxiety this time is due to the increase of water around the foundations, which on one side are becoming marshy.

The question of how to remedy the continual leaning tendency, which increases yearly, has occupied the authorities for the last few years since an Italian expert, Professor Cuppari, discovered that the subsoil was infiltrated from a hidden source of water. Then he voiced the warning that a similar cause had brought about the collapse of the Venice Campanile.

Cement Wall Suggested

Last year the government Provincial Commission disagreed regarding the remedy and the French Professor Isopeaux came to Pisa from Paris. He held that the only remedy was to build a circular wall of cement, lined with zinc, outside the moist sandy section of subsoil to a depth of 114 feet, the space between the dry part and the moisture to be filled with cement, which in drying would prevent water from seeping around the foundation. This is the method already used in excavations in Pompeii to prevent moisture from ruining the finds.

A Welsh firm of engineers offered to do the work gratis to preserve the tower. The experiment was successful, but when work started the permit was withdrawn, as Italian architects objected to giving the project to foreigners. The work was thus suspended.

Commission Studies Plan

The commission is studying the plan offered by Pisan architects, which consists in draining off the water and turning the course into an outer channel. The authorities say they are ready to begin work, but there has been a disagreement over how the pumping is to be undertaken and, therefore, the work is still at a standstill.

The Pisans are anxious about drawing off the water, as it might increase the leaning of the tower and it might find itself no longer able to stand out of plumb.—New York Herald Tribune.

The Lordly Salmon

Every Fisherman Will Read With Relish this Tale from the New York Herald-Tribune

BY ROBERT B. PECK.

They call him the lordly salmon, and that is putting it mildly. They could call him the snooty salmon and still not be guilty of exaggeration or misrepresentation. He is a spatted and monocled fish with the manners of a gutternsnipe. It is his pleasure to gather with his cronies in the summer in river pools of plate-glass clarity for the purpose of insulting the hard-working angler.

The midsummer angler of a salmon stream is perhaps a figure of fun. From the midriff down he is swaddled in a bifurcated, waterproof garment known as waders, which keep out the cool river water and continually baste his limbs with his own distillation.

In the forefront of this garment is a flapped pouch, similar to that affected by the female kangaroo, distorted, in the case of the angler, by the outlines of fly and leader boxes and probably pipe and tobacco pouch as well.

He wields a twelve-foot rod, which requires two hands for its manipulation, and wears continually a harrassed expression, due to his efforts to keep the rod in rhythmic motion and at the same time to use at least one hand to brush aside the savage little black flies which cluster about his head. His general aspect burlesques the appearance of a mail-clad knight with his trusty lance as he strides laobriously through the current in his hobnailed shoes, and he is just about as comfortable as such a warrior would be if set afoot in all his armor.

He has thus accoutered himself because it is the accepted mode for angling for salmon, which lordly fish, he understands, is a stickler for form.

But does the salmon display any decent appreciation of the trouble taken by the angler? He does not. By not so much as the flicker of an eyelash does the supercilious creature recognize the existence of the grotesque figure in its anwesing garb. Farmers have touched their hats as the fisherman crossed their fields to reach the stream; dogs have barked cordially at him; sheep have bolted in panic and then fled at the approach; the very pigs have grunted cordially as he passed the sty.

The salmon, the object of [illegible] remains coldly unfraternizable however. They do not bolt when bait is cast nor flee nor even grunt at his approach. For all the attention he attracts he might as well be a small boy perched on a fence waving at the Limited as it flashes past.

His advent chases not the slightest commotion in the pool. Wash nudges another to call attention to waders which were imported from England; none deigns a glance at the wading shoes, though they are made of muleskin and cost a dollar a pound. Not a fish looks at the newcomer. They look past him and through him and chew gum and appear to be discussing polo and yachting in undertone.

The flick of a black dose on the placid surface of the pool sends little ripples radiating out, and the sunlight, refracted at new angles, shimmers in widening circles on the bottom. Not a salmon takes the slightest notice. They are poised exactly in the positions they were before the fly was cast, gossiping quietly together and chewing eternally, with never an upward glance, never a tremor of fear or indignation.

The Jock Scott follows the [illegible] dose, the silver doctor the Jock Scott, and so on through the whole gaudy convention of the fly box. Tinsel and feather and silk, gorgeous panoply of jungle cock and pheasant's wing, are paraded past that indifferent assemblage, evoking about as much enthusiasm as an Al Smith parade passing the Union League Club.

Then suddenly the glassy surface of the pool breaks, they white and cut lunges a gleaming fish three or four feet in length. Smoothly he shoots out of the water, and then falls back at full length with a chugging splash, as though a boulder had been hurled into the river.

He is not rising to the fly. He is jumping for some obscure reason of his own, probably because, if one is a salmon, one jumps occasionally. It is the thing to do just as, at this season one abandons the sea and ascends the river.

Probably it is because of the abiding rancor the salmon's studied indifference has caused that the fisherman feels so exultant a thrill when he actually hooks one of these fish. It is as exhilarating as though Charles Evans Tughes or the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem had seated himself upon a tack which you personally had placed in a chair.

All the dignity and all the arrogant indifference of the salmon are flung to the winds. The incredible has happened—he, the salmon in person, has permitted himself to become impaled upon a fishhook. In the blindingly intolerable humiliation of that discovery the salmon suddenly becomes pure fish and exhibits his own redeeming trait.

For an instant the fisherman is likewise overwhelmed by astonishment. Here, for the first time in his experience probably, is a fish which he cannot control. His twelve-foot rod arches like a trout rod, his ponderous reel whines as the line whips out. The fisherman stands impotent and goggles at the great fish, which flings itself out of the water, realizing only after it has splashed back that the creature actually is fast to his line.

It takes the sting of a barbed hook to turn a salmon into an honest-to-goodness fish, but once he has reverted he is all fish. All his odious mannerisms, his studied air of detachment, his snobbish insistence upon ignoring mere human beings are forgotten and he concentrates with the utmost ferocity upon freeing himself from the hook.

The trouble with a salmon is that he is altogether too human. Once he becomes a fish he is a companionable fellow.

Herbert Hoover does not have many pets of his own, but he fully understands how much they mean to others.

While the Mississippi flood was at its height, and his whole attention was riveted on the task of assisting thousands of refugees, a soldier came into his temporary office.

"What are we going to do with these dogs, Mr. Secretary?" he asked.

"What dogs do you mean?" asked Hoover.

"Why, a lot of these refugees have brought dogs with them, and some have cats, too," replied the soldier.

"We'll take care of them, and good care," Hoover answered. "These people haven't saved much. If any of them have pets — dogs, cats or elephants—let them keep them and take care of them. Have some of the refugees build crates to take away the dogs."
