

On Wings of Wireless

by ARTHUR R. REEVE

CHAPTER X.
BROADCASTING.
"My Ruth—carried off in the sea. Vamp!"
Nita Walden repeated her words hysterically over the telephone. Garrick knew this there was no use to camouflage his fear.

"I'll be out there—with you—in a few minutes," he shouted.
Dick was still in a daze at the unexpectedness of the blow. Mechanical by he followed Garrick and climbed down the road. Nonsentient, the child of the lamp evening air seemed to curl about his faculties. He noticed for the first time where they were headed.

"Why this way, Guy? Why to New York?"
"I want to see Nita Walden first, and assure her. I promised her."
"What's the matter, Dick?"
"Well, she's not here. She's not here."
"What's the matter, Dick?"
"Well, she's not here. She's not here."
"What's the matter, Dick?"

"I don't know. But I think so. I had a vague feeling there were a couple at least back of me."
"So," Dick mumbled sarcastically, with a side glance at Garrick. "Ruth knew very well what she was doing, eh?"
Garrick was too big to take offence. "Dick," he replied merely, "Ruth confided in me, that morning at the Usma. She's really clever. You know it as well as I do. But they had her—they had them all, meshed, hooked. Why, Dick, all the time she has meant just to lead them on—and hand them over when she got them right. But she couldn't tell them here, that. Not Nita. Not yet. He glanced at his car. "But she had only that to her promise—to let me know—first! But Ruth is so clever; she thinks she's a match for anyone. And mostly she is! Wait! She'll prove it. It was cold comfort to Dick. "Well, now what good is it to be here?" "You had only one of the city who could have arrested a police officer."
Garrick smiled patiently. "You forget the Radio Central at Rock ledge. From Rock ledge I can alarm the police of the world. Every time, every amateur station, or any word-length of the wireless word is sent to me, I get it."
"That's it," cried Glenn. "If you could get over this quick, I'll need you, boy, tomorrow, real you badly. Get in shape."
"Been checked with, for him, good gear, and in a moment, with the full story, Garrick and Dick were speeding to Rock ledge. There were no formalities necessary at the Radio Central for a combination like Garrick and Dick, who was a constant frequenter of the place.
They zoomed through in a small room, quite plain except for the draperies that were artificially arranged to hid the bare walls. There were a few plants and flowers about, also. At one end stood a beautiful piano of the reproducing variety. Some of the best known artists had in reality played on it. There were phonographs of all the standard makes, and on the other side an automatic organ. "Now, here's the microphone," pointed out the attendant who had been looking at his watch and a schedule to determine when to be the best time to broadcast the show. Garrick had never at all the time. Garrick looked at the microphone with a steady gaze. "That's all right," he said. "I'll be there at 7:30. I'll be there at 7:30."

"I'll be there at 7:30. I'll be there at 7:30."

getaway. "here's you bill of sale or whatever it is you have for this?" Achille pulled out a paper. It was signed by Georges and Rae Larue as agent in fact. "Now I understand that the matter is settled," said the Inner Circle when this is signed?" The man nodded. "Then if you want to get free in this little illegal transaction, Mr. Achille, and have that fifty thousand yours instead of leaving it in court as cash bill, take me to the Inner Circle and get the goods!" Garrick's raid of the Inner Circle was a noisless, if not painless affair. But it was only fifty per cent successful. The net closed on Georges; Rae Larue was nowhere like a clam. It was more than evident, however, that he was not the "man-at-the-top."
Thoroughly they searched, but there was no trace of Rae on the others. "All the wild horses in Hades wouldn't get a word out of Georges now," Garrick observed. "Dick our only hope in wireless, or some form or other. Dick, you're an expert at it. (To be continued.)"

The Child And Music Study

Success in teaching music for children depends largely on getting the children interested in the music study. It is not without saying that a child, as well as an adult, will learn music or anything else only when he is interested in it. This is true of the child as well as of the adult. The child is not interested in the music study unless he is interested in the music study. The child is not interested in the music study unless he is interested in the music study.

PRIDE
If there were no pride in our own hearts we should not complain of the pride of others. "Every day sees humanity more victorious in the struggle with space and time."—Guglielmo Marconi.

Kerensky Feels Recognizing Soviet

Sees It as Means of Showing Up Russia's Government in All Its Ugliness
Ever since England's Labor Government resumed its diplomatic relations with Russia, Alexander Kerensky, Provisional President of Russia from March to November, 1917, who is editing La Russie Democratique in Paris, has been asked to give his opinions on the subject. The requests came principally from the editors of British Conservative and Nonconformist papers, who were violently opposed to recognition. "For some weeks he declined to make a statement, but recently did so in The Morning Post of London. This reads in part as follows: "It is difficult for me, as a foreigner, to speak on the question of this country's recognition of the Soviet Government; that is a matter of your domestic politics, although, for my part, I should be in favor of this recognition as a means of showing the Soviet Government up in all its ugliness."

The Fair Maid And Her Flower

That old Gaelic Saint, Brigid or Bridget, the fair maid of February, had three symbols, the sea bird known as the oyster opener, the lamb, and the dandelion. The oyster opener crying along the shores was the fisher folk's sign of the month's advent. The Spring-lark was the shepherd's sign. On lonely hills, said Fiona MacLeod, shepherd's folk still hear the crying of innumerable young lambs among the mists, without any accompanying bleating of ewes, a sure sign to the shepherds that St. Brigid has passed by with the flocks of lambs soon to be born. The Spring-lark for more hopeful signs than the cry of the first lambs. There are some who listen for it even more eagerly than for the song of larks or the chirp of the spring-announcing twitter of swallows.
