Australian Trade Minister in First Canadian Speecr Outlines Economic Problems

If only the peoples of the world could abolish the fear of unemployment and the fear of war, they would banish two of the greatest forces with which mankind is faced, declared Hon. J. E. Fenton, Minister of Trades and Customs for the Australian commonwealth. Mr. Fenton, who was delivering his first speech to a Canadian audience, stressed the importance of agriculture and manufacturing proceeding hand in hand for the achievement of general prosperity and so far as war is concerned, spoke with pleasure of the success of the London Naval Conference which he attended, and emphasized the need of "breathing the spirit of peace, living for peace and working for peace."

In regard to the relations between Australia and Canada, he suggested that every two or three years, delegations from each country should visit the other in order to promote a closer understanding. As to actual trade, he had little to say. He said he knew very well what a tariff schedule is, but one never before him, but he would not discuss that subject. Canada was on the eve of a Provincial election.

Reviews Progress

The greater part of the address was devoted to an account of the progress of Australia and the successes of Labor governments in that country. Preparing these remarks, he observed that although Australia and Canada are the two greatest Dominions of the British commonwealth of nations, the peoples really know very little about each other.

For the sixth time in the history of Australia, he said, a Labor Government was in office. Some people are inclined to mix the title of Labor party with what was known as the Communist party. Yet in Australia, Communism was a negligible quantity. As an instance, in an election in one of the biggest industrial constituencies in Sydney, a Labor candidate polled 29,000 votes against only 200 cast for a Communist opponent. That showed, he followed, the small amount of influence exercised by the Communist party in Australia. The Labor party was distinct and separate.

Continuing, Mr. Fenton said that it had often happened that when the Labor Government took office in Australia, it was faced with a deficit which was transformed into a surplus. For example, when the party came into office in 1910, there was a deficit of £3,000,000, and this sum was changed into a surplus of £13,000,000. When war broke out, the people of the country showed their confidence in the Labor party by electing them to office with an overwhelming majority and subsequently they won again on the conscription issue, Labor being opposed to it on religious grounds.

Wheat Prices Down

The Labor Government could not be blamed because the outlook was not as bright as they could wish. Everything was a little bit askew all over the world. Never did he remember a time when the products of the land had met with such adverse prices. The prices both of wheat and wool were down.

Mr. Fenton went on to say that in Australia railways, tramways, water works and electric systems are publicly owned. Giving the country is a 70,000 mile mail service. Out of a population of 6,500,000, no fewer than 5,000,000 people are depositors in the savings banks. In the nearby mandated territory of New Guinea, they had dreams of developing another Rand, similar to the wonderfully productive area in South Africa. Australia had immense potentialities and the Labor Government was in office to do its duty by the people.

It was essential he believed, that there should be a joining of hands of those who carried on manufacturing with those engaged on the farms. The men on the land should be properly looked after. No government was worth its salt unless it did its best for [illegible] man on the land was [illegible] His best friends were [illegible] factories, who were the [illegible] for the things which he produced.

[illegible] Mr. Fenton took his [illegible] to London to the recent [illegible]

"Over the three-power part was [illegible] he said, "it was signed on behalf of 570,000,000 people. I believe [illegible] work has been done, a step [illegible] the right direction. I am not a [illegible] at any price" man. If we [illegible] to defend our countries, the people who encroach upon our territories will have a rough time. But my belief is that the nations of the world [illegible] too much on armaments. Between 1905 and 1925 in wars and preparations for wars, the nations of the world spent £61,000,000,000 (305 billion dollars). But do you think that [illegible] and airplanes will play much part in the next war? It will not be those on the battlefield or on the water who will suffer most, but the non-combatants, thousands of whom will be wiped out in a single night by death-dealing gases. I want to see the day when we shall have our backs to the blackness of war and our faces to the bright days of peace."

Neutral State For League is Proposed

Paris—The question of removing the League of Nations from Geneva to an especially created independent territory much like the Vatican City state has been raised by Le Matin, French daily, and is arousing considerable discussion.

The proposition is linked here with the idea of the proposed European confederation which will also be placed in the same territory. The suggestion apparently has been prompted by difficulties the League has met at Geneva, but may also be intended to encourage European union by preparing a tangible site for it.

Managing Philip

Janet T. Van Osdel

For some minutes Mrs. Perkins watched five-year-old Philip and his "gang" in their occupation of her bit of front lawn on which she was bravely trying to grow a respectable crop of grass. There were three small boys besides Philip. Two of them had wagons and one had a kiddie-car. Philip had a tricycle.

One after another, with a great deal of noise and shouting, they would bring their various means of locomotion to the middle of the grass-plot and draw up with a flourish, sometimes with such a grand one that the rider took a header among his fellows. After a few moments, with an even greater commotion, they would ride off again.

At last Mrs. Perkins opened one of her porch windows and called, "Won't you boys keep off my lawn, please?"

"We can't, Mrs. Perkins," answered Philip in his deliberate fashion.

"What did you say, Philip?" asked Mrs. Perkins.

"I said," repeated Philip, slowly and in a louder voice, "we can't stay off your lawn, Mrs. Perkins."

"Why, can't you?" asked Mrs. Perkins.

"Because this is the station for our elevated trains—right here in the middle of this lawn. And our trains have to come into the station. And you can't move an elevated station, can you?"

"I've heard of its being done," answered Mrs. Perkins. "But I never heard of an elevated station being put in the middle of the lawn in front of a person's house."

A look of doubt crept into Philip's round face.

"Didn't you?" he asked. "Where would they put elevated stations?"

"They'd be more likely to put an elevated station where they could have walks leading to it and something besides grass, for the trains to run on."

"Where'd be a place most like that 'round here?" asked Philip.

"I should think the end of the walk between the two houses would be about the best place," suggested Mrs. Perkins.

"The trains could run smoothly along that walk into the station instead of bumping over the grass."

Philip's dirty face cleared, and in a moment was wreathed in a smile.

"Thank you, Mrs. Perkins," he said. "C'mon, kids, we're going to move the elevated station."

"Well!" exclaimed Philip's mother from the next porch. "I've been listening in and wondering how long you'd stand Philip's impudence. You should have come out and punished him."

"Philip wasn't impudent, Mrs. Liddick," replied Mrs. Perkins. "That elevated station he was talking about was as real to him as—as one down the street is to us. Those wagons and the tricycle and the kiddie-car were real trains to him. For the minute it did seem impossible for him to move his station from the lawn."

"Well, I'm glad you take it that way," sighed Mrs. Liddick. "You're the first neighbor I've had that could get along with that child."

"It is a question of understanding him, I think, Mrs. Liddick," answered Mrs. Perkins. "If one can look into a child's mind and can think his thoughts with him, a clearer conception is formed of his behavior than is otherwise possible, and he becomes a great deal easier to manage."—Issued by the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West 40th Street, New York City. "Vote For Women" Coming in Japan

Tokyo.—The House of Representatives May 10 passed a bill permitting women of 25 years or older to vote in elections for municipal and prefectural assemblies.

Although the measure likely will be defeated in the House of Peers, advocates of woman suffrage hail it as a victory presaging full enfranchisement for women in a few years.

The bill made no provision for women voting for members of the National Parliament.

The Cabinet withheld support of the measure but representatives adhering to both the Minseito (majority) and Seiyukai (chief opposition) parties joined the large majority standing for an unnamed vote.

When the bill was in the committee stage the Home Minister, Kenzo Adachi, said that although the Cabinet approved the theory of woman suffrage, it preferred slower progress in the matter.

He's Fifty-two And Teething

Beverly, N.J.—James J. Carr, fifty-two years old and the father of four children, is teething again. He has cut fourteen of his third set, all strong and healthy teeth.

Dr. Parry Scott, Carr's physician, and Dr. Harold Winkelspecht, his dentist, say there is no doubt that the third set of teeth is natural. Dentists have known of cases of third sets, but usually such an advanced age that the person dies before completing the set.

Mr. Carr, who is a newsdealer in this small community, twenty miles from Philadelphia, lost many of his second or permanent teeth early in life, when, despite constant care, they decayed one by one. Some were pulled out, and so the stubs remained.

Now new teeth have shoved through the gums and the stumps took on new life again. There is little pain, such as children suffer.

Mr. Carr now has twenty-eight teeth, half of them new and half old, or four less than the average adult has. Whether wisdom teeth is the question which still confronts him.

THE REASON WHY

Thin, Weak Children Need Baby's Own Tablets.

Malnutrition or inability to derive nourishment from food, is a common trouble with little children and is entirely due to stomach and bowel weakness. Another cause of loss of flesh and sleep is worms.

To correct stomach and bowel troubles and thus banish constipation and indigestion, break up colds and simple fevers; expel worms and allay the pain which accompanies the cutting of teeth is what Baby's Own Tablets were designed for. They never fail to be of aid and can be given with safety to the youngest babe.

Baby's Own Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Last of Clipper Ships In Race Across Ocean

Falmouth, England. — The great ocean race for the last of the windjammers from Australia to England was won by the clipper ship Herzogin Cecilie in 110 days. The magnificent four-master sailed into Falmouth Bay with all her canvas set, recapturing some of the glorious days of sail" as she was taken to anchorage off the seafront.

It was a triumph for youth. Her captain, Eliassen, only 26 years of age, is the youngest skipper in the fleet.

Six four-masters participated, the others being the Melbourne, the Pommern, the Beatrice, the Lawhill and the Archibald Russell, all laden with wheat cargoes. Except the Beatrice, which is Swedish, all are Finnish-owned.

Visitor—"Have you tried it out yet?"

Native—"Nope."

Visitor—"What, no fires at all?"

Native—"Oh, yep. Had five fires."

Visitor—"Then why haven't you tried your engine?"

Native—"Houses burn down 'fore we get there."

New German Plane

Dessau, Ger.—The Junkers airplane G-38, claimed to be the largest land plane in the world, started May 14 on its first extended cross-country flight, with 20 passengers aboard. After the trip the Luft-Hansa Company will take the plane over to use as a freight carrier.

The craft measures 148 feet between wing tips. It is practically without body or tail, and gives the impression of being all wings. There are four Junkers motors aggregating 2400 horsepower, and it can carry 6000 pounds useful load. The cabins are built in the wings.

THE ANAEMIC GIRL

Who Has Lost Her Charm and Beauty

"She seems to be losing her looks." This remark is often heard about girls who were once noted for their sparkling eyes, their rosy cheeks and their vitality. The cause is not far to seek—they have become anaemic; that accounts for the pallor and the loss of charm. The anaemic girl, if she neglects her health, may be a sufferer all her life.

Take heed, you pale, anaemic girls. Plenty of fresh air, nourishing food and rest will help you, but what you need most is good blood. Those wretched headaches; that fickle appetite and those terrible heart palpitations can only be banished if the blood is rich, red and pure.

Good blood—the kind that brings good health, is created by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The whole mission of these Pills is to build rich, red, health-giving blood. The Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Class Distinction

"Within the our walls of his own house a man may live a strictly ethical life; but the moment he crosses his doorstep he becomes entangled in a bewildering maze of relationships—with the postman who brings his letters, with the urchin who delivers his milk, with the scavenger who sweeps his street—relationships in which the first principles of social justice may have been violated, but which he is powerless to control. Throughout the remainder of the day he may be faced with the same perplexities," writes Mr. Alexander Mackendrick in the Hilbert Journal.

"He refrains from buying cheap goods in the fear that they are produced by under-paid labor, and discovers later on to his chagrin that sweating is just as likely to underlie the high-priced goods in the fashionable establishments of the West End. He may find indeed, if his sociological curiosity should carry him thus far, that the books he buys with which to nourish his soul and stimulate his moral sense, including the sacred Bible itself, are printed, folded, and bound by men, women and girls under conditions which preclude the possibility of their enjoying the leisure of mind and circumstance in which the higher moral sensibilities may freely develop.

"Under the prickings of an unsatisfied social conscience he may associate himself with 'Brotherhood' movements whose aim is to abolish class distinctions and to promote feelings of fraternity between intellectual culture and manual labor. But in spite of all attempts to hypnotize himself with fine words or poetic imagery, the haunting suspicion will not be held under that it is but a thinly-veiled pharisaism to think of abolishing class distinctions, when at any one of those Pleasant Sunday Afternoon meetings specially organized for that purpose, one man looks forward to a good dinner with a comfortable fire at which to finish the evening, while another has nothing in prospect but dry bread and cheap tea, followed by the social intercourse of a street corner.

"It will then be borne in upon him that the most ineradicable class distinction is the distinction between those who hold well-paid and secure jobs and those who have ill-paid ones or none at all."

Tiger Remembered Friend's Kindness

Animals Usually Attack Man Only Through Fear

Whether the story of Androcles and the lion is true or not, it is a very pretty one; and if the lion had the disposition of Carl Hagenbeck's tiger, the story might not be such a myth after all. Everyone has heard of the great Hagenbeck menagerie in Germany, where hundreds of animals are kept in surroundings as near as art could make them to their native haunts. The Hagenbeck brothers did a big trade in animals, supplying private and public collections with anything from a lizard to an elephant. Apart from being dealers they had a real love for their wares, as the following story will show.

Carl Hagenbeck once bought two young tigers. One of the little creatures had caught a sort of influenza cold, which so affected its eyes that for some time it lost its sight. Hagenbeck nursed his invalid carefully for several months, visiting its cage daily, and so successful were his ministrations that the patient completely recovered. Later on both his purchases were sold to the Berlin Zoo, where they stayed many years. From time to time Carl Hagenbeck called at the gardens and never forgot to pass the tiger's cage. As soon as the animal caught sight of him it would show great excitement. Even if it merely heard his voice, it showed pleasure and would purr like a cat, nor would it be satisfied until he had entered the cage and sat with it as friend to friend. People used to watch these meetings of the two friends with interest mingled with fear, but there was no cause for alarm. The tiger had not forgotten its benefactor. Hagenbeck had a water-color portrait of his striped friend and always cherished the memorial. The tiger is one of the most dreaded of jungle dwellers, for its ferocity is a by-word; but with all its ugly reputation this incident shows that it can remember kindly treatment and a kindly master. Most animals attack man through fear of him, and very few will attack him if left alone. Here and there we read of isolated cases of unprovoked attack, but these cases are rare, and it is the exception rather than the rule.—The Humane Pleader.
