

"No, I'm not," said Mrs. Atkinson. "This is not the way you are thinking of the old way."

The Treasure of the Buccoleon

By A. D. HOWDEN SMITH

BEGIN HERE TODAY. Without a word, Hugh slipped in his gear and zoomed off on first seat.

CHAPTER VIII. "What are you going to do with the key to the treasure?" asked Nikka.

"I don't know," said Jack. "I'm not sure."

"I don't know," said Jack. "I'm not sure."

"I don't know," said Jack. "I'm not sure."

"I don't know," said Jack. "I'm not sure."

Second Thoughts. The dining-room was packed to overflowing.

The first, second, and third rounds were fought evenly, but at the end of the fourth round, the champion was down.

"I don't know," said Jack. "I'm not sure."

A Substitute. A wedding had been arranged to take place in a little country church.

"I don't know," said Jack. "I'm not sure."

Counteracting Hannah

My dear, I think it is foolish," said Mrs. Roberts, "to worry about three-year-old children."

"You're quite right," sympathized her friend. "I should say a careless way of doing anything, whether of talking or of dressing, would have some kind of bearing on one's future personality."

"Yes, I suppose so. Practically all the new books on child culture stress the influence of the mother."

"I don't think I should have to tell you that," said Mrs. Roberts.
