

King Fixes Princesses' Status In Succession to British Throne

London.—Any dispute over the succession to the British throne was settled recently when it was announced that the King had made a special investigation and fixed the status of the royal princesses.

The infant daughter of the Duke of York, Margaret-Rose, was ranked fourth in line by the King. When the Princess was born, the question was raised as to how she ranked with her older sister, Princess Elizabeth. With royal children, the older brother or sister ranks first, but no such provision had ever been made for girls, and some authorities said, if the succession ever came to the Duke of York's children, the sisters would be entitled to rule jointly.

The succession now stands:

1. The Prince of Wales, eldest son of the King.
2. The Duke of York, second son of the King.
3. Princess Elizabeth.
4. Princess Margaret Rose.
5. The Duke of Gloucester, third son of the King.
6. Prince George, youngest son of the King.

If the Prince of Wales married and has children, they will rank next in succession, ahead of the Duke of York and his children. If the Duke of York has a son, he will take precedence over his sisters.

Victoria's Letters Mine of Treasure

Volume Gives Additional Information of Royal Court

London.—The volume of letters of Queen Victoria, published here in a form of a new edition, is a mine of treasure of additional information of the life of the Queen and the life of the Royal Court between 1837 and 1897.

Queen Victoria was, of course, not only the person who reigned, but the person who was the center of the life of the Empire. Her life was a life of duty and of sacrifice. Her letters show her as a woman who was not only a monarch, but a woman who was a mother, a friend, and a confidante.

a nice little impromptu dance, the courtiers being so entertaining. We had a quadrille in which I danced with Eddy (Duke of Clarence). I did quite well. Then followed some politics and waiters.

Of all the human documents in the book none gives a better picture of the Queen than her description of the dazzling scene in Westminster Abbey when her world-wide Empire was celebrating her fifty years reign.

"I sat alone (Oh, without my beloved husband, for whom this would have been such a proud day) where I had sat forty-nine years ago and received the homage of princes and peers. My robes were beautifully draped on the chair. The service was well done and arranged. The Te Deum by my darling Albert sound so beautiful and the anthem by Dr. Bridge was fine especially the way in which the National Anthem and dear Albert's chorale were worked in."

Thus more than a quarter of a century after Albert's death and at the summit of her life Victoria's thoughts were still with her husband.

As regarding the Prince (later Edward VII) not treating his nephew as an Emperor," wrote Queen Victoria, "it is really too vulgar and too absurd as well as untrue to be believed."

"We have always been very intimate with our grandson and nephew, and to pretend he is to be treated in private as well as in public as His Imperial Majesty is perfect madness. If he has any such notions he had better never come here."

William, however, was appreciative of jubilation when he was made a British subject, wearing the same uniform as St. Vincent and Nelson. "It makes one feel quite glad," he exclaimed. "And remarkable in the light of later events, he added the fact something like Macbeth must have felt when the witches summoned him."

Once again the letters show how Victoria was disturbed by how Edward VII will ruin the country if he can. Her Majesty wrote one of the great Victorian Prime Ministers.

Vitamins May Prove Cure For Leprosy

Washington.—Food and not medicine may be the weapon with which mankind conquers his ancient and mid-century foe, leprosy.

Experiments in Japan indicate that development of the disease may be prevented by the presence of vitamins in the diet, which increases the individual's resistance. Important studies supporting this theory have been reported by Dr. K. Shiga, bacteriologist and dean of the Imperial medical faculty at Seoul, Korea.

Other scientists and physicians have placed much reliance on chaulmogra oil as a treatment for the disease. In fact, too much has been claimed for this medicine. Dr. George W. McCoy, director of the United States National Institute of Health here, declared that there is still no specific treatment for leprosy. Many people have been misled by optimistic statements regarding the value of chaulmogra oil and its derivatives.

Dr. Shiga found that when he injected leprosy bacilli in normal healthy rats, they did not develop disease. Later, after their food had been deprived of vitamins, they soon had leprosy sores. From this it appears that lack of vitamins in the diet accounts for susceptibility to leprosy. If this theory is proved to be true, leprosy can be prevented by proper diet, and the cure for it may also be accomplished by dietary measures.

Simple Things

I like to fling the doorway wide and bid a friend come in.

I like to have a blazing fire in which my dreams to spin.

I like an easy-chair at times and a little garden space outside with blossoms red and white.

A bowl of soup and home-made bread, a yellow bird that sings.

For happiness, it seems to me, is born of simple things.

Effective Cold Cure Origin of Life Ascribed to Rays From Hotter Sun Than To-day's

Is Found at Last

New Treatment: Also Helps Cases of Pneumonia as Well as Measles

Chicago.—A scientific conception of the origin of life—the protoplasm was activated into life by ultra-violet light rays of a power now unknown—was explained recently by Dr. Irving S. Cutter, dean of the Northwestern University Medical School.

In the lecture on contemporary thought before the Medill School of Journalism, Dr. Cutter said that life arose amid conditions which have disappeared from the earth, never to return.

"It seems certain that ultra violet light from a sun far hotter than it is today played a predominant part in bringing about complex chemical combinations."

Synthetic Sapphires Detected by Rays

Synthetic gems are real gems, so far as chemical composition is concerned. To detect them from those found in nature has therefore been difficult. But the Scientific American (New York) now tells us that synthetic sapphires can be told readily from the natural stones by means of the cathode-ray tube.

"The use of the tube in this work is the first commercial application of the apparatus which was developed in the research laboratory of the General Electric Company, by Dr. W. D. Coolidge about four years ago."

"Sapphires, next to diamonds in hardness, are used by the company at the rate of more than a million and a half a year as jewels for bearings in meters and other delicate instruments."

"Trays of sapphires, both natural and synthetic, are exposed in a dark room to the powerful rays of the tube for a few seconds. All glow or radiate colors while exposed to the rays, but when the rays are turned off, the natural sapphires continue to glow whereas the synthetic sapphires do not. In addition to sorting the natural from the synthetic sapphires, the rays also help determine where both the natural and factory-made gems come from, an important advantage, according to engineers."

"Should sapphires from Montana be mixed with stones from Australia, we could find this out with the cathode rays," B. W. St. Clair, of the company's laboratory, explained. "In the case of synthetic stones, in most cases we can determine which factory made them by the different hue or the glow while the rays are on. We have one particular kind of natural sapphire which does not glow at all. In this case, the lack of glow under the rays immediately tells us its origin."

"Tests have been made with diamonds, and it has been found that synthetic stones turn decidedly brown when placed in the rays, whereas there is no change in natural stones. However, these tests have been but a beginning, and no definite conclusions have been reached."

Mechanical Yacht To Be Eliminated Sunday School Lesson

British and U. S. Yachting Authorities Introduce New Rule

London.—British and United States yachting authorities have agreed to do away with the "mechanical" yacht, which came into fame in the recent races for the America Cup, in future international contests.

After a series of conferences in which Norman Clark Noll and B. Heckstall-Smith, British representatives, met first with New York Yacht Club representatives, then with the council of the British Yachting Association, the council voted to adopt with modifications the New York Yacht Club's rule rating racing yachts of above 14½ meters in length.

The modification provides that Class J yachts, which includes the America Cup contenders, must carry a mast weighing at least 5,500 pounds bare, that standing rigging shall not be set up nor worked below the upper deck, and that the yachts shall be fitted with "reasonable" living accommodations.

This change eliminates many of the ingenious but expensive devices used by the Cup defender Enterprise in its recent triumph over Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock V. The light and efficient duraluminum mast and the various below-deck devices for handling the sheets, halyards and backstays come under this ban, but which for hoisting the heavy mainsail and the unique boom with which Enterprise was equipped, called "the greatest contribution to yachting engineering in many years" by Charles Nicholson, Shamrock's designer, will be allowed.

The new rule goes into effect January 1, and all yachts must comply with it in the 1931 racing season.

Canada Develops New Seed Industry

Various Committees Study Seed Varieties for Canadian Requirements

The economic importance to Canada of a soundly established field and garden vegetable seed production that would replace the foreign seed in our market has been recognized for many years. With this in view, the Seed Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the Departments of Agriculture of the provinces and the Canadian Seed Growers' Association organized, in 1924, Plant Breeding Committees consisting of outstanding field and garden vegetable and crop specialists associated with Dominion and Provincial experimental farms.

The purpose of these committees is to study and approve varieties for registration by the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, and to build up a supply of reliable stock seed of such varieties for commercial seed production. Since these committees were organized, a wide range of varieties of field and garden crops has been approved, and supplies of foundation seed have been bred and made available to growers. The seed produced for the foundation stock is subject to field inspection and grading provided by the Seed Branch, and by the final sealing of the seed in packages.

Such a sound basis has been laid for the development of a seed production industry under official control and in harmony with Canadian conditions and requirements. (Issued by the Director of Publicity, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ont.)

Alaska To Acquire Mounted Police Force

Juneau, Alaska.—The organization of a territorial constabulary, fashionable in the Canadian Mounted Police, is being urged by many towns and settlements in Alaska. Authorities can only promise hope, however, such a radical change in law enforcement would disrupt numerous law agencies now yielding appointment control in Alaska.

The need for such an organization is great, the petitioners point out. Under the system, that wide empire known as Alaska's outland might be patrolled as it should be. Alaskans are law-abiding, but such an agency could render many services to prospectors, trappers, travelers and natives in remote localities.

Dependable Canadian Eggs

Where eggs were anything but a dependable article of food twelve or fifteen years ago, to-day Canadian eggs of the higher grades are looked upon as quite safe to offer anyone for breakfast and need not be broken before coming to the table. The result of grading is that production and consumption have more than doubled during the past ten years.

Jesus' Faith in Power of Love

November 16. Lesson VII.—The Healing Centurion (A Gentle Whose Faith Jesus Commended)—Matthew 8: 5-13. Golden Text—And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God.—Luke, 13: 29.

ANALYSIS

I. A GREAT NEED FELT, vs. 5, 6.
II. A GREAT FAITH RECOGNIZED, vs. 7-13.

INTRODUCTION.—Jesus' ministry at Capernaum appears to have lasted about two years, from December of the year A.D. 27 to November of 29. A great deal of intense and untiring activity was crowded into those two years, and also much of his teaching, both by parables and otherwise. The Gospel narrative tells us of the multitudes which thronged about him, and followed him from place to place, attracted by the freshness and power of his teaching and by the wonderful works of healing which were done. It is more interesting to us than the multitude are the individual men and women, disciples and others, who were his subjects in his healing work. These were not wholly insensate, his quibbling questions about custom and fashion, the followers—John the Baptist, his two brothers, the Jewish pharisee disciples, the paralytic, the Canaanite woman in similar distress, whose pitiful pretence that she was a Jewess Jesus put aside that he might minister more directly and fully to her own as well as to her daughter's need. Of especial and extraordinary interest is this military officer whose character and whose faith in Jesus are so attractively presented in the text, before us.

I. A GREAT NEED FELT, vs. 5, 6.
Jesus was again in Capernaum, his home city (Matt. 4:13), where so many of his great works of healing had been done. The centurion, probably a Roman officer in the employ of Herod Antipas, had been an attendant of the Jewish people, and through them he came to know Jesus and to believe in him. It is very much to his credit that he thought so highly of his servant, Luke says, "his servant was dear unto him." Luke adds also that he did not himself presume to go to Jesus but "sent into his elders of the Jews" thinking perhaps that a Jewish teacher would be unwilling to consent to the request of a Gentile. He was to learn why the large human sympathy which was in the heart of Jesus, stepping all barriers of race or nation, indeed the coming of this man in the flesh, was one of the first and greatest gifts of God to the world, and that Jesus was sent into the world to save man from sin and to bring us to the Father.

It is possible that the centurion had known personally the man whose son had been healed by Jesus, according to the Gospel of John 4: 46-54. He was held in high esteem by the Jews of Capernaum, who said to Jesus, "He is worthy that thou should do this for him; for he loveth our nation and himself buildeth a synagogue (Luke 7: 3-5). It is interesting to learn that in recent times the ruins of a synagogue have been found at Tell-Hum, believed to be the site of the ancient town, and that an effort is being made to rebuild it.

The word "palsy" is an old English shorter form of the Greek "paralysis." It means the loss of power to move, whether wholly or partially. Since, in this case, the sufferer was "crievously tormented," it has been conjectured that the case was one of neuralgic paralysis. Luke says that he was "at the point of death."

So simple, so direct, and so great is this man's faith in the power of Jesus that he believes him able to heal by speaking the word only. "Is he, or says not worthy that Jesus should come up here?" "But only say the word and my servant shall be healed."

Moffatt renders verse 9 as follows: "For though I am a man under the law, I tell myself I have soldiers under me; I tell myself to come, and he comes, I tell myself to go, and he goes, and I tell myself to do this, and he does it." Believing Jesus to be like himself under authority received from his country, the man asks that he be given powers that will give his servant equal power with Jesus. As a well-known modern writer puts it, we see "the wisdom of his faith beautifully shining out in the boldness of the soldier."

Jesus' representative here as using a figure drawn from the ancient prophets of Israel who conceived the glorious future age of salvation and by a great ideal of all good things, to it all people of the world would be invited, and in it the people of the past, and the future would have equal share and part. See Isaiah 25: 6-8; 26: 19; 27: 24; Daniel 7: 14. More than once Jesus saw in the coming of him of people other than Jews, of other races and nations, the dawning of that new age. Compare Luke 13: 29 and John 12: 20-24. One of the earliest problems which the Christian church had to solve was that of the admission of Gentiles on equal terms with Jews by the way of faith in Jesus Christ. At first there were individual cases received by special favor or because of some extraordinary experience of divine grace, later in unrestricted numbers through wide open doors in the missions of St. Paul who saw that this was in harmony with the mind of Jesus, Romans 9: 22-24.
