

These seven motherless children who sailed in the Anchor-Donaldson liner "Athenia" to join their relatives in Scotland, are all members of the Wilson family whose mother died, in February and whose father employed in the Canadian Timber Limits, finds it impossible to give them the time and attention necessary. The children are in charge of officials of the Anchor-Donaldson Line who will look after them until they arrive at Glasgow where they will be turned over to their Grandparents. It is to be hoped that they will all return later to take part in the future development of Canada.

"These facts are well known and Joseph continues, but they are seldom realized in our own country. The English Government has never yet backed our own artists as other governments have done, and we have grown accustomed to relying on private efforts for all endeavors to push British art in national and international markets. We have allowed foreign rtists not only to get ahead Brushville won't buy my eggs so I of us in the international markets of the world, but even to invade our own home markets and thus derive British artists of some of the support they should receive on their own doorstep." Deplores Indifference of Public Sir Joseph deplores the ignorance of the average Englishman regarding contemporary English art as compared to the knowledge of the Frenchman regarding French art. "Once we leave the relatively small circle of people keenly interested in modern art," he says, "it is amazing what ignorance exists in England concerning artists whose work is held in the highest esteem, both by the fellowartists and by professional art critics. Ask the average Englishman to give you the names of a dozen living Brit-ish painters and a dozen living British sculptors, and he is likely to be hard put to it to complete the lists."

Sir Joseph cites three factors which he considers vital to the artist in selling his paintings. "These three hings are size, subject and price. It s better to sell six pictures for low prices than to sell one for a high kept five hanging for price and nonths or years in a studio. "With regard to size, the wise painter will bear in mind the dimensions of the ordinary middle-class sitting-room, and till his nosition is secure and his reputation established and perhaps even then-he will refrain from painting monster-size canvases which could only be accommodated in a municipal art gallery or the palace of millionaire."
