The Gringo Privateer

By PETER B. KYNE

CHAPTER XVII—(Cont'd.)

"Well," the king greeted Muriel, "what did he say?"

"He said he'd obey."

"Good. Did he say anything about having off Martin Bruce?"

"No."

"Good. I forgot to tell you to tell him to say off Martin. He's gone to Huachita and Martin and some of his friends are there. I hear, my boy, I'm afraid I'm liable to lose my new general manager before I've even had a chance to break him in. There's only one thing that will comfort me for the loss, however, and that's the death of Martin Bruce." He sighed and looked in his napkin. "We'll have for the best," he added pleasantly.

His daughter gazed at him in wide-eyed horror and left the room.

At Huachita, about four o'clock, Ken Burney and his bodyguard put their horses up at the Bracy stable, and in single file walked up the middle of the street to the International Hotel. On the front porch Martin Bruce sat with two friends, discussing cattle and the weather. He eyed the approaching quartet, decided he was outnumbered and nodded faintly to Ken Burney, who came up alongside him and said arrogantly:

"Mr. Bruce, you're leaving town at once. I don't feel comfortable in Huachita with you here, so you get the next train west if you care to pull out under present conditions."

"You said I was to stay here," Ken Burney said, "and I'm going to stay and see how you like it." His blue eyes looked upward at Burney from under his shaggy eyebrows to the widest eyes it would have been possible for a man to wear.

"You don't know what you'd do until the occasion arises. When it does, a wise man estimates the situation and plans accordingly. It just isn't possible for Martin Bruce to insult any gentleman."

"Somebody must have insulted him lately," another one of the bodyguard remarked. "He ain't quite over a black eye."

"I heard one of his riders man-handled him a week ago, Bill."

"I am the boy who did that," Ken Burney assured them. "I pulled him on his horse, took his gun away from him and slapped him around for five minutes; then I cut in a hurry and rode over to El Rancho for a new job. I secured that job—and if any of you boys have an idea that the king doesn't know what he's doing, I'll give you your time right now. Remember, the king is more than nine years old."

There was less resentment in the eyes of the bodyguard now. Apparently, by mutual consent, the trio decided to accept the general manager's explanation.

"Huachita straddles the international boundary," Burney went on after a pause. "I'm going to explain the jeffe politico across the line tonight. Can any of you boys lead to his house?"

It appeared that one of them could. The jeffe politico, as Burney saw at a glance, was plainly a pure-bred Spaniard, well dressed, courteous, affable. Burney introduced himself and Senator De Haro begged him politely to be seated and inform him in what manner he could be of service. Burney came abruptly to the point.

"Do you know a Senator Miguel Gallegos?"

Senator De Haro spread his facile hands eloquently. "To my sorrow, I do, Senator Burney. He is a Mexican citizen by naturalization only and his real name is Michael Gallegher, although he is half-Italian, Sicilian, perhaps, would be the word. You know the Sicilians?"

"Not people, senator."

"You have explained Miguel Gallegos. He is a half-breed, with a foreknowledge of imported desperadoes and a deluded Mexican, who follows him blindly because he provides them plentifully with food, clothing and excitement, and, occasionally, some money. If I had my way I would send a detachment of rurales against him, but the governor is loath to take any action until Gallegos behaves himself less peaceably than he has during the past two years."

"You are, perhaps, acquainted with Senator Bradley Bardin, the American cattleman?"

"Ah, yes, Bardin of El Rancho. A fine fellow."

"Well, I am his general manager, and we strongly suspect Miguel Gallegos of branding our calves on that portion of El Rancho that laps over into Mexico. It is known as El Cajon Bonita."

The jeffe politico nodded.

"Whether he does this for his own profit or has an alliance with Senator Martin Bruce we do not know."

"He dines tonight with Senator Bruce at the International Hotel, senator. You observe, I am not without information. I keep my eye on that fine fellow."

"Suppose, Senator De Haro," Ken Burney suggested, "that instead of involving your government in an annoying melee with Miguel Gallegos, you permit me to attend to the matter for you? Could that be arranged unofficially? If so, I will guarantee to relieve you of this foreign annoyance."

Senator De Haro gazed upon his visitor with new interest. "It is always desirable to avoid international complications, Senator Burney. You understand I am but a subordinate, yet I have a feeling that such a plan would be most agreeable to His Excellency, the governor."

"If you can give me his unofficial assurance of sympathy and silence, Senator De Haro, and through your own official influence see to it that an armed party of thirty men, under my command, is permitted to cross the boundary without molestation?"

The jeffe politico smiled. "It is often an official mistake to see too much, my friend. Your government maintains immigration and customs guards only at the ports of entry, of which Huachita is one. My government does the same. You can cross elsewhere at your pleasure and if, unfortunately, my people should apprehend you, an explanation to me will satisfy."

What New York Is Wearing

By ANNABELLE WORTHINGTON
Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Finished With Every Pattern

An alluring black transparent velvet introduced alenon lace in deep ecrú shade in vestee and in the novel sleeve flounces.

Seaming accentuates the slim hip line that develops into circular fullness below.

Horizontal pin tucks mark the natural waistline at the front to break the breadth.

Style No. 2777 may be had in sizes 16, 18 years, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust.

It's a dress that you'll find lots of use for afternoons and informal evenings all through the Autumn and for Winter wear.

Less formal but no less attractive is black cretonne crepe with white ecru.

Size 36 requires 4 1/2 yards 39-inch material with 3/4 yard all-over lace.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Party Garters

A pair of party garters would not come amiss in the Christmas stocking of any deb. sub-ed or post-ed; they might happen to want to favor.

Black and white is the newest color. And the monogrammed garter has it all over the rest in chic!

If you want to make your own gift from the start, get garter lengths of the best silk elastic you can find, not over three-fourths inch wide. Make very good satin ribbon, slightly wider than your elastic, use black satin for the back, white for the front, and with a secure hand-stitch, preferably the backstitch, sew them together. The initials should be monogrammed on the white before you finish this seaming. You can draw your friends' initials, or just use a transfer pattern for the monogram.

Should your friend prefer two colors to black and white, say green and lavender, you can make this same gift in them. But if in doubt as to color preferences, choose black and white for these monogrammed party garters are likely to have a real vogue.

"Don't Die of Love"

Cases of suicide through disappointed love are becoming so numerous in Japan that the authorities are issuing propaganda films and posters, warning the people not to "die of love!"

Her Father's House

She went to the House of God in her door, plain dress—
She who had gone so humbly, so wistfully;
Mid the well-dressed throng in the busy traffic press,
Hesitant, half abashed by the pomp and pride.
Appraising glances and cold, disparaging eye
Found her too humble for notice, hurrying by.

Hesitant still, like a timid child she went,
Awed by the stately service; and huddle of heart,
And, lo, as in deep contrition and need she bent,
Came the knowledge that she in the splendour of life had part.
She rose with her meek garb vanished in a purple dress—
A guest in a royal palace—a welcome guest.

Freak Libraries

A library for men only, to which neither women nor books written by women will be admitted, is to be established in an Iowa town.

The donor of this library is not, however, quite so original as he may have supposed. A woman was before him. This lady, a Russian, banned books by men.

In the course of her life she accumulated some 20,000 volumes of all of them written by members of her own sex.

Libraries of this kind are interesting, but they have certain drawbacks. George Elliot and George Sand were both women—will some librarian in a hurry be deceived by the masculine names and allow their works into the library for men only? And male authors have sometimes chosen to write under a feminine name—do you think you can tell the difference between Mrs. F. or Adam, as the case may be, cannot be entirely excluded from the strictest library, Edn.

Economizing on Furniture Polish

All housewives know how soon a large bottle of furniture polish will disappear when used in the usual way. I have found a way of making it last much longer. Instead of putting the polish directly onto a soft cloth, try preparing a number of them at once, my way. Cut enough pieces of cheese-cloth of the desired size—I prefer eighteen inches square to fill a two-quart fruit jar when folded closely. Then your snobbish authors write about it to the depth of half an inch. Roll the jar on its sides so as to get the inside well coated with the polish. Then pack the cloths in, put on the lid, and leave it a few days before using the cloths. When ready to use you will find the dust cloths well saturated with the polish, and when treated this way, one cloth will last a long time, and the others will be just as good as the first, when you bring them out, even though they have been left in the closet for months.

Black Crow Mothers Two White Chickens

A black crow with a family of two white chickens sounds like verging on the impossible, but that is a combination that exists at Boundary Falls, B.C. Mrs. Crow seems to be more than delighted with her pair of white babies, but is a bit impatient that they do not show any evidence of being able to fly aloft.

John Swannell, a lad of 12 years, residing at Boundary Falls, is the promoter of the novelty. While roving, about a month ago, he found a crow's nest with four eggs in a tree. Just to have a joke on Mrs. Crow he took two of the eggs away and replaced them with two White Leghorn's eggs and awaited developments. In due time he found that two strong and healthy chicks had arrived, but that the crow's eggs did not hatch.

Philological Philosophy

It is all right to dote on a girl, but a chap who sows his wild dotes while driving a motor car, is a menace to life.—Montreal Herald.

He did not heed the traffic cop,
But raced along pell mell,

And the sexton "tolded" the bell.

Bed-Time

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

I like to go to bed, when it is night,
With cozy blankets, all checked off with pink;
And great big pillows, oh, so soft and white!

I like to lie awake, awhile, and think,
I like to think about the pretty birds,
And all the frisky squirrels, in the park.

And how the loving Father-Mother, God,
Is always staying with them, in the dark.

And He is with them, too, when it is day;
And all the sky is just a lovely-blye,
And I'm so glad to know His tender love

Is watching over little children, too.

And, by and by, I start for Sleepy Town,
All drowsy, and as happy as can be,
With great big pillows, soft as thistle-down.

And fluffy checked blankets over me,
—Anne Haviland Eccleston.

Snow

White are the far-off plains, and white
The fading forests grow;
The wind dies out along the height,
And denser still the snow;
A gathering weight on roof and tree,
Falls down scarce audibly:

The meadows and far-sheeted streams
Lie still without a sound;
Like some soft minister of dreams
The snow-fall hoods me round;
In wood and water, earth and air,
A silence everywhere.

The evening deepens, and the gray
Folds closer earth and sky;
The world seems shrouded for a way;
Its noises sleep, and I,
As secret as yon hidden stream,
Plead dumbly on and dream.

—Archibald Lampman.

Famous Old Club Celebrates Centenary

The Royal Geographical Society was a hundred years old in October. Beginning as the Raleigh Dining Club, an organization of travellers, it was never in a more thriving condition than to-day. It goes back to the time of the Duke of Wellington, who was one of its first fellows. Today it includes 6,439 members, among them royal persons and many honorary correspondents. The income is £22,000 a year. It has a travel and exploration library of 15,000 volumes, of which many are very rare. About 20,000 letters are received every year. Some, as the president, Sir Charles Close, said at the August meeting, "open up a wide field of interest and conjecture. Such questions as 'What are the Seven Seas?' 'How many continents are there?' are not uncommon. I believe that Atlantis is having a rest just now, however, and the serpent is dormant." Among the society's riches should be mentioned 154,000 maps and charts, 1,700 atlases, 15,000 photographs and 2,000 lantern slides.

The council of the society invites papers on Human Geography. It would like to know what is going to happen to the continually increasing population of nearly every country in the world, where will the surplus be accommodated; how food and work will be found for the new myriads; what hands are suitable for development.

It is famous for its evening meetings, at which explorers appear and tell their stories. Discussion follows, some of the most eminent travellers and geographers in the world taking part. At these meetings Livingstone, Stanley, Nansen, Amundsen, Scott, Peary, Shackleton and Sven Hedin have been welcomed. At the present time the society is a patron of Watkins, who is surveying the Greenland ice cap to determine whether an air route to Canada would be feasible. Travellers are trained in surveying instruments are lent. 'Hints to Travellers,' first published in 1854, is now in its tenth edition. It has to do with map-making, geology, natural history, anthropology, industry and commerce, and gives hints as to clothing and health in many climates.

The success of the institution has been due mainly to the exertions and devotion of three men: Roderick Murchison, Clements Markham and Douglas Freshfield. Fortunately for his fame is the explorer who receives the accolade of the society. The late Dr. Nansen was twice honored: when the Patron's Medal was bestowed on him in 1891, and when, on the occasion of his Farthest North, a special medal was presented. "The world," said Sir Charles Close at the summer meeting, "has lost an heroic figure which will become legendary."

London's Famous Lake

The Serpentine, Hyde Park, London, is now exactly two centuries old. It was begun in 1790, because Queen Charlotte, the consort of George III, had the idea of building a Royal palace in Hyde Park and converting the place into a Royal pleasure ground. But the scheme fell through, apart from the construction of the Serpentine, which is up a number of ponds and is one large sheet of water.

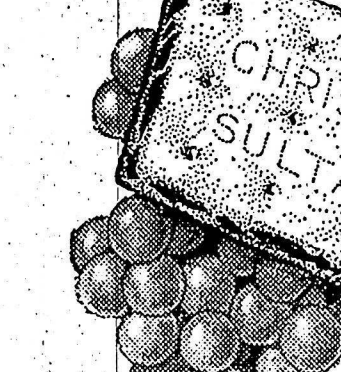

Many people have wondered why and how the Serpentine got its name. In landscape gardening in the first half of the eighteenth century it was the rule that ornamental water should be perfectly straight and square. So the slope of the Serpentine was really a revolutionary innovation, and the name given to it emphasized its break with the old tradition.
