To everybody a gracious invitation is hereby extended.

The editor of this great family journal was one of those who accompanied the hockey boys to Erin on Friday night last and of course we were a little disappointed because they failed to win. But that is not what we started out to say. While in Erin the Markdale contingent were guests of the Busholme Inn, the most comfortable and home-like hotel we have ever been in. The place is small for a hotel but Mr. Jack Bush and his mother have a splendid business and are pleasing all those who patronize the Busholme Inn. It's a credit to Erin and to the proprietors.

Miss Macphail's Letter

Parliament hill looked as though we were in a state of siege one day this week. Every entrance to the ground was guarded by policemen fully armed. They seemed to be wearing their Sunday coats, too, since a little more braid than usual was in evidence. I thought there had been some accident and asked one of them but no, they were just expecting a demonstration of the unemployed. A delegation of them were determined to see the Prime Minister. About a thousand unemployed gathered at Confederation Park in the centre of the city and attempted to have a meeting, but as soon as one of their number held aloft by a number of comrades began to address the crowd they were surrounded by policemen and according to eye witnesses roughly handled and arrested. Behind the main building of the Parliament Buildings a detachment of Mounted Police—Canadian Royal Mounted Police—were held through the morning ready to quell any trouble at its beginning. About two thirty the Prime Minister received representatives of the unemployed in the Railway Committee Room. Their case was presented by an able young man, who was, though, quite uncompromising and bitter. The Prime Minister in reply did not show much understanding—or so it seemed to the listeners.

An interesting debate on the need of an increase in the Income Tax was staged earlier in the week. The resolution was introduced by Mr. Lucas of Alberta and seconded by Mr. Speakman of the same province. It was pointed out that an income of $5000 in Canada bears at the present time a tax of $32. In United States $16.88, but according to their proposed new rate $37.50 and in Britain $64.49. Last year 143,601 persons in Canada paid income tax. The total amount paid was twenty six and a half million dollars. The concentration of wealth is clearly shown by the fact that out of the total number of income tax payers 13,447 paid $33,000,000 in taxes.

All speakers in favour of an increase argued that it is a sound principle to get the taxes where the money is.

Mr. Speakman amused the house by saying "May I suggest also, Mr. Speaker, that we should have some consideration for our more wealthy citizens. We should not refuse them the glorious opportunities which have been accorded our civil employees. As I heard the Prime Minister and listened to that splendid eloquence with which he illustrated and illustrated the really noble sentiments which he uttered as he spoke of the patriotic activities which actuated at least part of our Civil Service in accepting the reduction, not reluctantly or grudgingly, but gladly and joyfully, taking a deep and keen pleasure in this opportunity of being of service to their country in her hour of need, I thought to myself: Why should selfishly restrict this pleasure to a limited class? Why not afford that same opportunity and grant that same privilege to the relatively wealthy men and women in Canada? In this, as in other matters, our motto should be "Equal rights to all and special privilege to none." The government promised to consider the resolution.

Grand Juries are to be eliminated, on the plea of economy. This required an amendment to the Criminal Code. At the same time another amendment was offered making it a crime to obtain goods on the strength of bad cheques. Mr. Guthrie, "It is only when a person obtains goods by reason of a bad cheque. If a man purchases goods and pays part cash and subsequently when the bill comes in he issues a cheque that is no good, he did not obtain those goods on the strength of that cheque and that is not a criminal offence. The offence is when a cheque is issued and as a result of the cheque goods are obtained, and the cheque is no good. The presumption then is that the transaction was fraudulent."

This session has heard more debating over money than any other: What is money? Should it be based on gold? Have we enough of it in circulation? Should it be issued by the banks or by a Department of the Government? Should it or should it not bear a relation to the goods to be moved? All these questions are being asked and answered. Mr. G. G. Coote, the member for MacLeod, Alberta, asked that the banking committee should be empowered to inquire into, and report on, the advisability of amending the Dominion Notes Act, so as to eliminate the provision for redemption of Dominion notes in gold and to provide for the issuing of Dominion notes without relation to gold reserve. Mr. Coote claims there is not enough money in circulation, and that the Dominion Treasury should issue more money, put it in circulation without interest, to offset the too great deflation which has taken place. Too little currency in circulation has caused the fall of commodity prices and if prices are to be raised then the amount of money in circulation must be increased. He pointed out, also, that during the World War we departed from the Gold Standard and increased our currency to take care of increased business. If we had not done so, we would have lent the war, he said and he wanted to know why we could not take a similar action now to enable us to win the war against poverty. If we followed the advice given to Great Britain in the Macmillan report we should issue Dominion Notes to the amount of $500,000 instead of the $144,000,000, as at present. Such an addition to currency in circulation would, Mr. Coote believed, raise prices up to something like the level they were a couple of years ago and enable Canadians to pay the debts which they then contracted. "Anyone who today refuses to use such measures to put more credit in circulation and increased prices is as foolish as the man who refuses to put air in a flat tire for fear he may blow up the tire. I remember hearing of a Scotchman who, the first time he saw the sign 'Free Air' did use so much air that he blew out the tire. It is possible to blow up a monetary system with inflation as was done in Germany, but that is not what is proposed in the United States today, nor is it what I am proposing in Canada," said the member for MacLeod.

Mr. Ian MacKenzie, the brilliant young Liberal, in the main agreed with Mr. Coote but thought a Royal Commission more appropriate than the Banking Committee. He made a very impressive speech, and finished with these words "Speaking for myself I say that the policy of the Liberal Party at this time in Canada should be to look to the left, to look to the interests of the consuming masses of our people, and not to be afraid to change any laws which are built up on class depression will be found in fearlessly developing that policy which will be in the interests of the consuming masses throughout our Canadian Land."

"He should be home by this time"

Mrs. Fowler was worried. Her husband had gone to town for the day but he was to be back in plenty of time to feed the stock. And now it was getting dark.

Then the telephone rang: "Sorry, Mary", came her husband's voice, "I can't get home till late. Better telephone George Bothwell and ask him to help us out."

So the stock was fed and Mrs. Fowler's worry was ended. No wonder she said: "It's lucky we have a telephone."
