Miracles of the Present Day

Mrs. J. was happy in her home with her husband and two little children. It is true they didn't have much but until the husband took sick and their savings were used up, life was pleasant enough. Long days and nights of worry and anxiety coupled with extra work had their dire effect, however, and a breakdown caused the doctor to secure her admission to the Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives.
She was almost overwhelmed with hopelessness, but before very long, the kindly medical and nursing attention, the uninterrupted rest, the fresh air and good food, worked their "miracles." Now Mrs. J. is quite sure that she will go home soon, to face and overcome life's difficulties—such being the effects of the return of hope and health, which so often are the gifts of the Muskoka Hospital.
This work needs the generous support of many friends, without which it could not be carried on. A subscription from you will be gratefully received. Please send it to G. A. Reid, 223 College St., Toronto 2.

He referred to lives of great men—the greatest of all being the life of Christ, and quoted that beautiful passage:
Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime
And departing leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

He said we should act as reflectors and not as absorbers and reflect the good actions from our hearts to others and in the end we would be rewarded. A beautiful anthem was rendered by the choir and a sacred vocal selection by Miss Donald Sloan was appreciated.

"Relieve The Depression"

Under the above heading three weeks ago The Standard outlined a proposal for the relief of the depression which found favor with many. We heard no unfavourable arguments against it.

On Thursday evening of last week Professor Irving Fisher of Yale University in an address at the University of Toronto outlined a similar proposition. In reporting the address The Globe of Friday has this to say:

"Guaranteed medicine for arresting future onsets of the disease of depression was prescribed last night by business doctor Irving Fisher, Professor of Economics in Yale University, noted author, well-known economist, adviser to the United States Government. Professor Fisher analyzed booms and depressions in an address before the local Counsel Club in the Economics Building of the University of Toronto. C. L. Burton was Chairman.

"Professor Fisher made significant comments on the recent business collapse. He found many parallels between the latest depression and its notorious predecessors. He stated definitely that, for the United States at least, bottom was reached last July and has since been passed. He asserted that had the right measures been applied two years ago the slump would not have been so serious. The business structure had lately been poised on the edge of destruction, he said, disaster being averted only by determined effort, since, in his opinion, ailing business never experiences a natural, unaided recovery.

"Correct management would deprive future threatened depressions of 90 per cent. of their toll of bankrupt business and of human misery. Reflation, directed by Government through central banks, reaching individual banks, was offered as one of the depression-breaking steps. This movement requires supplemental effort to restore confidence of merchants to the point where they will borrow the money made available by reflation. The rest of the scheme calls for the use of 'stamped scrip', vouchers, which automatically circulate at high speed, thereby having the effect of increasing the circulating medium, subsequently of raising prices, and finally of ending the depression. Professor Fisher proposed the remedies as sure, as already tried out in part as efficacious. Although not specifically discussed, his argument indicated that radical political changes need have no part in the return of good times.

"Use of 'stamped scrip' was illustrated. 'Merchants will borrow newly established credit only when they know money will be spent in their stores,' said Professor Fisher. The confidence restorer was 'invented' by an Argentine business man. Economists paid no attention to it at first. Now they see it in successful operation. It works this way: The State prints dollar bills. It rules that to be kept legal tender the bills must receive a 2-cent stamp once a week. The result is that the holder of the bill is in a hurry to spend it before the next stamp must be affixed. The money circulates at high speed. The debt liquidates itself by means of the stamps." Professor Fisher reported that such instruments have been in successful use locally in an Iowa town for two months. They have also been applied on a larger scale in some European countries. "It is to be hoped that the advantages of this discovery are generally appreciated before the next meeting of the United States Congress," he declared.

"The economist noted that the present business cycle was the first to which he has given close attention. On doing so he discovered that a stable value of money is also definitely interlocked with hills and valley in trade curves. Twenty different plans, all with merit are available for correcting the 'dollar disease.' He maintained that if applied they can keep the purchasing power of money constant to within a few per cent. Regulate the value of the dollar and debt regulation will take care of itself, Professor Fisher asserted."

In the Monday issue of The Mail and Empire the following editorial reference is made to Prof. Fisher's proposal:

"Startling as it may have sounded, the declaration recently made in Toronto that 'the world could even now snap out of the depression in two or three weeks' was neither the idle judgment of a demagogue nor the catchword of a publicity seeker. The statement was made in good faith by Irving Fisher, professor of economics at Yale University.

"Professor Fisher told the Counsel Club and its guests that he had come 'to counsel with you and take counsel from you'. He admitted that he did not know all there is to be known about booms or depressions; that, in fact, he was in a sense an apprentice in the study of this department of economic science. But he staked his professional reputation upon his endorsement of a unique device for overcoming the terrible results of business stagnation.

"Stamp money is an ancillary circulating medium of exchange which, under Professor Irving's plan, would be issued under national authority. In form it is script in dollar denominations with fifty-two squares on the back for the fixing of stamps at weekly intervals. These stamps, two cents each, must be affixed on the designated dates by the holder before the script is again negotiable. Obviously, such script would circulate rapidly—each holder endeavoring to be rid of the paper before the stamp rate. And to be rid of it he must pass it on in goods or services. At the end of the payment of debts or the purchase of year, of course, the issuing authority has collected in lawful coin $1.04 cents for each dollar of script which has circulated. The script is automatically redeemed—and no inflation has occurred.

"But during the year of its active life, assuming that only one person has held and passed it on per week, it has moved fifty dollars' worth of goods—mostly consumers' goods. And if it made daily journeys from one pocketbook to another, the single script dollar would have paid for $365 worth of goods and services. Sunday circulation could be achieved by placing the properly stamped paper on the collection plate. As a matter of practice such script probably would move from person to person at a velocity exceeding one transfer per day; and it is not difficult to conceive of one script dollar effecting the movement in a year of well over $500 worth of goods.

"Professor Fisher is not the originator of the plan. He is the self-confessed humble apostle of an Argentinian business man who 'thought up' the idea. But his apostolic zeal has led the eminent Yale economist into an active campaign whose object is to so promote the idea that it will be sufficiently acceptable to the new United States Congress that that body will sanction its use at its first session.

Script of this character has had minor tests in small communities in the United States and Austria recently. Professor Fisher claims 'apparent success' for its limited use in the modified forms adopted. Whether it would do all that he claims for it if nationally applied as a business restorative remains to be seen."

Where Weight Counts

If you were a working man dependent upon a not too liberal supply of daily work to support your family, what would you think if your weight went down from 150 to 95 pounds?

Herbert was alarmed when this happened to him, but he did not want to take "time off" nor to spend money on himself. However, coughing and weakness had their effect and one day he had to be hurried to the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. The experienced doctors at the hospital shook their heads when Herbert's weight was known—so little to build on!

However, patience, good nursing and complete rest have had the desired effect. His weight has increased twenty-two pounds, and he feels sure that he will be able to return to support his family at no distant date.

Financial assistance is urgently needed to continue the good work for many such as Herbert. Will you please lend your assistance by sending a generous contribution to G. A. Reid, 223 College St., Toronto 2.

"I'll tell them not to come"

The Gordons had looked forward to this evening for weeks; their Dunvale cousins were to motor over for an oldtime reunion. Yet here was Dora in spite of her determination to see it through, fit for no place else but bed.

"Don't worry" said Harry, "they'll not have left yet. I'll telephone and tell them not to come. We'll make it next week instead."

Long Distance, for big or little emergencies or as part of the daily routine, is always easy to use, quick and dependable.
