Much excitement was caused on Thursday about 5 p.m. when a general alarm was given and a request for men to join in a search for Mr. Albert Armstrong, who had been missing from one o'clock of the same afternoon. His people had tracked him into the swamp and across the river, but could find no further trace of him. About one hundred men with lanterns proceeded to search and kept it up for some three or four hours, when they disbanded for the night, feeling that they could accomplish nothing in the dark and with the extremely high wind, which drowned out any shouts or shouts. They started again at day break Friday and by this time fully 200 or more men were engaged in the search. At eleven o'clock a.m. Mr. Armstrong walked out of the swamp to the 4th line, somewhat north of where the search parties were. Mr. Armstrong had lost his direction and been wandering around for almost 24 hours without food or sleep, an experience none would care about having, especially if they knew the condition of the swamp, which is full of water and brush. Both Mr. Armstrong and his friends returned to their homes wet and weary and thankful the search was over. ### BEWARE CAMEL'S NOSE

An Arab who was living alone in his tent, was surprised to hear footsteps coming over the sand straight for the door of his tent. He listened, and was soon more surprised than ever to see the folds of a camel tent door open and the nose of a camel come through. "Get out of here," said the Arab.

The camel didn't move but spoke back to the Arab, and said: "It's so cold here on the outside, please let me only put my nose through the door so that I may be warmed a little."

"Well, see that you come no further," said the Arab, and having said that he went about his work.

When he turned to look again, the camel's head was in at the door, and it was looking all over the tent.

"Didn't I tell you to come no further," said the Arab.

"My head was so cold," said the camel, "and I thought if you would let my nose in, you would not mind about my head."

"Well, see that you come no further," said the Arab, and he went about his work.

When he looked again, the camel had put its front foot and shoulder through the door and was reaching farther into the tent. The man turned quickly and was angry and told the camel to move back and go away, and was about to reach down to lift up a stick to strike it, when the camel walked boldly into the tent and drove the man out of his own home.

I think we all know now, what the saying means. There is only one way to keep the camel out, and that is not to even let his nose in, and there is only one way to keep evil out of our thoughts, and minds, and hearts, and that is not to allow it to have the least entrance. There's an old proverb that says:—"First the man took a drink, then the drink took a drink, and then the drink took a drink, and then the drink took the man."

That's always the way when we start a friendship with things that are wrong.

"THE FORGOTTEN MAN"

It is time that someone did something, and something worth while, to bring The Forgotten Man into the limelight, says the Ottawa News-Letter. There are quite a number of Forgotten Men and no one ever hears anything about them. But if it wasn't for The Forgotten Man the town would be in pretty hard straits at this time. The Forgotten Man is that individual who does an honest day's work, pays his bills, brings up three or four children and indulges himself in an occasional pipe or cigar. He keeps up a small savings account, never asks for charity from anyone, never gets into trouble with the police, never makes a speech or writes a letter to the editor. In short, he's the individual who keeps going on his own momentum—good times, bad times, or indifferent. When the hat is passed around for the down-and-outers The Forgotten Man chips in his mite. When tickets are to be bought for a charitable purpose The Forgotten Man digs down for a couple. Sometimes he buys three or four tickets and stays home. He knows the promoters don't really need him at the affair, and his money helps along the good cause, so he's satisfied. The tax gatherer visits The Forgotten Man regularly, and collects toll for the up-keep of police courts, jails, workhouses and poor-houses—none of which The Forgotten Man ever uses. Hundreds of social agencies exist for the improvement of the human race, but The Forgotten Man is never included in their surveys. He is self-supporting, self-starting, self-sufficient, and being so he is counted in on nothing except the census. But in that document he cuts a big figure because he probably forms the vast majority.
