MISS M'PHAIL'S LETTER

The Railway Bill has at last had second reading and is in Committee at the moment. If it takes as long to get it through Committee and third reading as it took to have the House of Commons approve of the principle of the Bill, we will be here until summer. Instead of the board of seventeen directors the Canadian National is to be run by three trustees, one of the three to be chairman, who will be virtually the czar of the C. N. R. The Prime Minister intimated that these three trustees were really the receivers; it is rather astonishing then, that the board is to be self-perpetuating and the set-up cannot be changed without the consent of both Houses of Parliament.

The Bill also makes provision for a tribunal the membership of which will be found by one appointment from each railroad and the third, recommendation made by the chairman of the board railway commissioners.

The Bill requires compulsory co-operation on the part of the C. N. R. Many members, of which I was one, feared that this would at some future time make the Parliament of Canada morally responsible for the C. P. R. bonds. The Canadian National has always been loaded down with a back-breaking burden of debt which should have been written off in part when the railroad was purchased by the State. For this reason the C. N. R. has never had a real chance to show what could be done under public ownership. The earnings could not possibly cover the charges against the road. It has suffered also from having people connected with the administration who did not and do not believe in public ownership.

In speaking briefly before the vote was taken, I said: "The railways are having a very difficult time because of lack of volume of traffic, but this bill will not increase the volume. It seems to me that the railway problem is being attacked in the wrong way. The deflationary monetary policy which has been pursued by this administration has had more to do with the lack of traffic than any other one thing. There is not enough money in circulation to enable Canadians to exchange the goods they produce for other goods, with the result that the railways have suffered. Then tariffs also must be considered. While the monetary problem is fundamental and the tariff problem is not, it is rather curious that an administration which has done everything possible to obstruct international trade should now be worried because our railroads suffer from lack of volume of business. Not only have tariffs been raised higher and higher, but we have had excise taxes and dumping duties as added obstructions to trade. Is it to be wondered at that we have a railroad problem of gigantic proportions? The ability of the Canadian people to produce goods has not lessened; we could have just as great a volume of goods and passenger traffic as we ever had."

"If this bill should pass our unemployment will be increased; further unemployment will be created among the railway employees and employees in the steel industry, the wood-working industry and any others closely associated with railroading. They will then be unable to purchase as much as previously and this will prove but another step in the process of deflation and the further contraction of the purchasing power of the Canadian people."

Dr. Manion concluded the debate ably and humorously reviewing the speeches in criticism of the bill. Both Liberals and Farmers split their vote, Conservatives and Labour voting solidly; the Government for the bill, Labour against it.

Montreal has been aroused over a most unhappy incident which took place recently in that city. A tenant in Montreal's foreign quarter had had his leg broken in an industrial accident and due to the deferment in payment of accident insurance had fallen behind in the payment of his rent. Though only two months in arrears, the landlord took action against him, had his furniture seized and the sick man and his family literally turned out into the street in zero weather.

Among the crowd gathered was one Nick Zynchuk, a Polish Ukrainian, who had formerly been a boarder with the evicted family and who still had some belongings in the house. Zynchuk insisted on getting his things; a constable named Zappa shot him in the back, with fatal results. The funeral took place on the Saturday following, when some twelve thousand people formed a great procession. The police were out in full force, mostly plainclothesmen, and if the two and a half column account in the Montreal Gazette of March 13th is to be credited, made unwarranted attacks on individuals in that vast throng. "Sure enough, just before reaching the intersection, a Gazette reporter approached one of these plainclothesmen with no other intention than to ask a question. For answer the officer let fly his fists, hitting the abashed scribe on the point of the jaw. Recriminations - "sock" - another blow, near the eye this time." And again the Gazette: "Two women were standing on the corner, the small child of one of them between them. A plainclothesman approached and gave one of the women a tremendous shove that projected her forward about five or six feet. She turned round and scowled at the fellow. When the other woman holding the child by the hand got abreast of her, the three of them began walking slowly away. The plainclothesman followed, gave the same woman a glancing blow on the back of the neck with his open hand and sent the child rolling into a snowbank with another mighty shove. The child cried pitifully, the woman swore volubly. Soon all three were lost to view, all three having been pushed from one corner to another until lost to sight. Many other similar episodes occurred throughout the crowd."

"The mounted officers were more judicious in their handling of the crowd. They asked the people to keep moving and rode their horses with care, so as not to injure anyone. It was these men who restored a measure of good humour to the crowd and their efforts that resulted in its dispersal shortly after."

Many in the crowd had carried banners and banners also decorated each side of the hearse bearing the body of the dead Zynchuk. These seem to have driven the plainclothesmen to hysteria.

Many of the ministers in the churches of Montreal based their sermons on the following day on the unhappy incident.

The March number of "Ontario Farmer" contains a most interesting article by James G. Gibson. The little need is "Where are we heading?" Mr. Gibson, a junior farmer, is a graduate of Toronto University and has also had the benefit of eight months study at the London School of Economics and some months travelling on the continent.

He is now farming with his father, D. Z. Gibson, at Caledonia in Haldimand county. I would advise anyone interested in farm problems to secure this article; it is well worth keeping for reference. Mr. Gibson says: "We young men from Canada's farms demand that we be given as good a chance as anyone else in this country to earn a decent living, or we want to know the reason why. The advice from the national leaders that we save our money, be honest, pay our debts, work hard and keep quiet, has given us nothing but more debts, lower prices and higher taxes." And on the World Economic Conference: "It is possible, but not probable, that the Governments assembled at London will lift the world out of the ditch and declare a general economic peace. . . . Our main task within Canada is to see that our burdens are so distributed as to guarantee that every person will bear his or her fair share. It is not necessary to remind us that this is not the case at present in our fair Dominion. Farmers, labourers and lower-paid business men are carrying the whole load, with most of it falling on farmers and labourers. "While the number of millionaires grows steadily and while the bankers express complete satisfaction with ten to fifteen percent dividends, nobody on earth can convince the ordinary man that the burden is being equally shared by all. While dividends are paid before wages and while the wages of money are greater than the wages of human labour, the ordinary man on the farm or in the factory comes to the conclusion that Canada has become, by some strange process, a coupon-clipper's paradise and a poor man's hell. 'Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey, where wealth accumulates and men decay.'"

Mr. Gibson goes on to deal with our chief Canadian problems, for which he offers solutions. House of Commons, March 18th, 1933.

CHEVROLET

FIRST came the Chevrolet Master Six—and Canada responded with the greatest welcome given a Chevrolet since 1929. Then, we stepped the leader with another entirely new line of cars, the Standard Six. Down went the Chevrolet base-price to the lowest figure in history for a full-size, six-cylinder closed car. And the spotlight of public interest flashed brighter than ever on Chevrolet.

Now—for the first time—there are two Chevrolet Sixes—the Standard and the Master. Body-styles for everybody. Prices for several different groups of buyers. But only one standard of quality—the very same high standard that has made CHEVROLET the greatest name in low-priced motoring.

Both Standard and Master lines offer Air-Streamed Bodies by Fisher—safety glass windshields—and that newest General Motors sensation: Fisher No-Draft Ventilation. In the Standard Six, you can enjoy all these advantages at the lowest operating cost of any full-size car on the road.

Whichever you choose—the mere fact that the leader built it is assurance of outstanding value. But you'll never really know how outstanding it is till you come to our showrooms—see it, drive it, yourself!
