New Deal for Fishermen

Down by the Atlantic, round the fresh water lakes and rivers and along the Pacific shores, there's a feeling of decided optimism among those in the Canadian Fishing industry over the effort of the department of Fisheries to increase the national consumption of Canadian Fish.

According to one authority, the things for which the industry and the fishermen have advocated for years are coming to pass. For instance, $200,000 has been appropriated by the Government to increase the demand for Canadian fisheries products. There is a $300,000 loan fund voted for the assistance of needy Maritime fishermen in renewing boats and gear. And there is a move afoot for social improvement that will bring more benefits to the men who go down to the sea.

It looks like a new deal all around for the Canadian fisherman and his industry. If the advertising now being launched by the government is successful in its objectives, those in fishing circle claim that the Canadian fishing industry will receive an impetus that will send it forward to a new and prosperous basis. And in this first to benefit will be the fisherman himself. According to the "Canadian Fisherman," a journal devoted to the industry, the welfare of Canada's fisherman is recognized by all in the industry as of primary importance. With the increased popularity of fish and greater consumption of it by their fellow citizens, the fishermen of Canada are looking forward to an era of better conditions and more prosperity than have been theirs for years.
