 Comparatively speaking we have experienced a rather mild winter as the lowest temperature reading here to date was 15 below zero. According to the meteorological records here during the past fifty years the winter of 1913 was the daddy of them all for downright inclemency. On January the 12th of that year there was a rip-roaring blizzard with a temperature of 15 below zero and a wind velocity of 40 miles an hour, and on Feb. the 5th of the same winter the mercury dropped to 33 degrees below zero in the shade.
 A local representative for a daily newspaper residing in a lake shore town about twenty miles from here says that several of the citizens of that community have seen robins recently. "We feel assured that the birds, referred to by the misinformed Irishman of that locality, were not robins but a species of bird known as the grosbeak whose size and plumage markings are somewhat similar to the robin. The grosbeak is a native of the far north country and is generally seen here preceding a cold wave from the arctic circle. It is quite probable that it will be a week or ten days before "The Red, Red Robin comes Bob-Bob-Bobbin'" along to North Grey.
